SI'MILE. n. s. [simile, Lat.] A comparison by which any thing is illustrated or aggrandized.
Their rhimes,
Full of protest, of oath, and big compare,
Want similes. Shakesp Troilus and Cressida
Lucentio slipp'd me, like his greyhound,
Which runs himself, and catches for his master,
—A good swift simile, but something currish Shak.
In argument,
Similes are like songs in love,
They much describe, they nothing prove Prior
Poets, to give a loose to a warm fancy, not only expatiate in their similes, but introduce them too frequently Garth.

SIMI'LITUDE. n. s. [similitude, Fr. similitudo, Lat.]
1 Likeness; resemblance.
Similitude of substance would cause attraction, where the body is wholly freed from the motion of gravity, for then lead would draw lead Bacon's Nat Hist.
Our immortal souls, while righteous, are by God himself beautified with the title of his own image and similitude Raleigh
Let us make man in our image, man
In our similitude, and let them rule
Over the fish and fowl. Milton.
Similitude to the Deity was not regarded in the things they gave divine worship to, and looked on as symbols of the god they worshipped. Stillingfleet
If we compare the picture of a man, drawn at the years of seventeen, with that of the same person at the years of threescore, hardly the least trace or similitude of one face can be found in the other. South.
Fate some future bard shall join,
In sad similitude of griefs to mine,
Condemn'd whole years in absence to deplore,
And image charms he must behold no more. Pope.
2. Comparison; simile.
Plutarch, in the first of his tractates, by sundry similitudes, shews us the force of education Wotton.
Isaac, in his similitudes, never departed from the woods, that is, all his comparisons were taken from the country. Dryden.

SI'MITAR. n. s. [See CIMETER.] A crooked or falcated sword with a convex edge.

To SI'MMER. v. n. [A word made probably from the sound, but written, by Skinner, simber.] To boil gently; to boil with a gentle hissing.
Place a vessel, in warm sand, increasing the heat by degrees, till the spirit simmer or boil a little. Boyle
Their vital heat and moisture may always not only simber in one sluggish tenour, but sometimes boil up higher, and seeth over, the fire of life being more than ordinarily kindled upon some emergent occasion More against Atheism.

SI'MNEL. n. s. [simnellus, low Lat.] A kind of sweet bread or cake.

SIMO'NIACK. n. s. [simoniaque, Fr. simoniacus, Lat] One who buys or sells preferment in the church.
If the bishop alleges that the person presented is a simoniack, or unlearned, they are to proceed to trial Ayliffe

SIMONI'ACAL. adj [from simoniac] Guilty of buying or selling ecclesiastical preferment.
Add to your criminals the simoniacal ladies, who seduce the sacred order into the difficulty of breaking their troth. Spectator

SI'MONY. n. s. [simonie, Fr. simonia, Lat] The crime of buying or selling church preferment.
One that by suggestion
Tied all the kingdom, simony was fair play,
His own opinion was his law Shakesp Henry VIII.
Many papers remain in private hands, of which one is of simony, and I wish the world might see it, that it might undeceive some patrons, who think they have discharged that great trust to God and man, if they take no money for a living, though it may be parted with for other ends less justifiable. Walton's Life of Bishop Sanderson.
No simony nor sinecure is known,
There works the bee, no honey for the drone. Garth.

To SI'MPER. v. n. [from ymbelan, Sax. to keep holiday, Skinner. He derives simmer from the same word, and confirms his etymology by writing it simber. It is perhaps derived from simmer, as it may seem to imitate the dimples of water gently boiling.] To smile; generally to smile foolishly.
A made countenance about her mouth between simpering and smiling, her head bowed somewhat down, seemed to languish with over-much idleness. Sidney
I charge you, O men, for the love you bear to women, as I perceive by your simpering none of you hate them, to like as much as pleases them Shakesp As you like it.
Stars above simper and shine,
As having keys unto thy love, while poor I pine. Herbert.
Let then the fair one beautifully cry,
Or dress in smiles of sweet Cecilia shine,
With simp'ring angels palms, and harps divine. Pope.

SI'MPER. n. s. [from the verb.] Smile; generally a foolish smile.
The wit at his elbow stared him in the face, with so bewitching a grin, that the whistler relaxed his fibres into a kind of simper, and at length burst out into an open laugh. Addison.
Great Tibbald nods the proud Parnassian sneer,
The conscious simper, and the jealous leer,
Mix on his look Pope's Dunciad.

SI'MPLE. adj. [simplex, Lat. simple, Fr.]
1. Plain; artless; unskilled; undesigning; sincere; harmless.
Were it not to satisfy the minds of the simpler sort of men, these nice curiosities are not worthy the labour which we bestow to answer them. Hooker.
They meet upon the way
A simple husbandman in garments grey Hubberd's Tale.
I am a simple woman, much too weak
T' oppose your cunning. Shakesp. Henry VIII.
O Ethelinda,
My heart was made to fit and pair with thine,
Simple and plain, and fraught with artless tenderness. Rowe.
In simple manners all the secret lies;
Be kind and virtuous, you'll be blest and wise. Young.
2. Uncompounded; unmingled; single; only one, plain; not complicated.
To make the compound pass for the rich metal simple, is an adulteration or counterfeiting. Bacon.
Simple philosophically signifies single, but vulgarly foolish Watts.
Among substances, some are called simple, some compound, whether taken in a philosophical or vulgar sense If we take simple and compound in a vulgar sense, then all those are simple substances which are generally esteemed uniform in their natures so every herb is called a simple, and every metal a mineral, though the chymist perhaps may find all his several elements in each of them. Watts's Logick.
Let Newton, pure intelligence, whom God
To mortals lent, to trace his boundless works,
From laws, sublimely simple, speak thy fame
In all philosophy Thomson's Summer
3. Silly; not wise; not cunning.
The simple believeth every word; but the prudent man looketh well to his going. Prov. xv.
Dick, simple odes too many show ye
My servile complaisance to Chloe. Prior

SI'MPLE. n. s. [simple, Fr.] A single ingredient in a medicine; a drug. It is popularly used for an herb.
Of simples in these groves that grow,
We'll learn the perfect skill,
The nature of each herb to know,
Which cures, and which can kill.
Drayton's Quith.
Our foster nurse of nature is repose
The which he lacks, that to provoke in him,
Are many simples operative, whose power
Will close the eye of anguish Shakesp. King Lear.
He would ope his leathern scrip,
And shew me simples of a thousand names,
Telling their strange and vigorous faculties.
Milton.
What virtue is in this remedy lies in the naked simple itself, as it comes over from the Indies. Temple.
Around its entries nodding poppies grow,
And all cool simples that sweet rest bestow;
Night from the plants their sleepy virtue drains,
And passing sheds it on the silent plains. Dryden.
Med'cine is mine what herbs and simples grow
In fields and forests, all their pow'rs I know.
Dryden.

To SI'MPLE. v. n. To gather simples.
As once the foaming boar he chas'd,
Lascivious Circe well the youth survey'd,
As simpling on the flow'ry hills he stray'd. Garth.

SI'MPLENESS. n. s. [from simple.] The quality of being simple.

I will hear that play
For never any thing can be amiss,
When simpleness and duty tender it. Shakesp

Such perfect elements may be found in these four known bodies that we call pure ones, for they are least compounded, and approach most to the simpleness of the elements Digby.

SI'MPLER. n. s. [from simple.] A simplist; an herbarist.

SI'MPLESS. n. s. [simplesse, Fr.] Simplicity; silliness; folly. An obsolete word.

Their weeds been not so nighly were,
Such simplesse mought them shend,
They been yclad in purple and pall,
They reign and rulen over all. Spenser's Pastorals.

SI'MPLETON. n. s. [from simple.] A silly mortal; a trifler; a foolish fellow. A low word.

A country farmer sent his man to look after an ox, the simpleton went hunting up and down. L'Estrange

Those letters may prove a discredit, as lasting as mercenary scribblers, or curious simpletons, can make it. Pope.

SIMPLI'CITY. n. s. [simplicitas, Lat. simplicité, Fr.]

1. Plainness; artlessness; not subtilty; not cunning; not deceit.

The sweet-minded Philoclea was in their degree of well-doing, to whom the not knowing of evil serveth for a ground of virtue, and hold their inward powers in better form, with an unspotted simplicity, than many who rather cunningly seek to know what goodness is, than willingly take unto themselves the following of it. Sidney

They keep the reverend simplicity of ancienter times. Hooker

In low simplicity,
He lends out money gratis, and brings down
The rate of usance Shakesp

Marquis Dorset, a man for his harmless simplicity neither misliked nor much regarded, was created Duke Hayward.

Suspicion sleeps
At wisdom's gate, and to simplicity
Resigns her charge Milton.

Of manners gentle, of affections mild,
In wit a man, simplicity a child. Pope

The native elegance and simplicity of her manners were accompanied with real benevolence of heart. Female Quixote.

2 Plainness; not subtilty; not abstruseness.

Those enter into farther speculation herein, which is the itch of curiosity, and content not themselves with the simplicity of that doctrine, within which this church hath contained herself. Hammond's Fundamentals.

3. Plainness; not finery.

They represent our poet, when he left Mantua for Rome, dressed in his best habit, too fine for the place whence he came, and yet retaining part of its simplicity Dryden.

4. Singleness; not composition; state of being uncompounded.

Mandrakes afford a papaverous unpleasant odour in the leaf or apple, discoverable in their simplicity and mixture. Brown's Vulgar Errours

We are led to conceive that great machine of the world to have been once in a state of greater simplicity than now it is, as to conceive a watch once in its first and simple materials Burnet

5. Weakness; silliness.

Many that know what they should do, would nevertheless dissemble it, and, to excuse themselves, pretend ignorance and simplicity, which now they cannot. Hooker

How long, ye simple ones, will ye love simplicity, and fools hate knowledge? Prov. i. 22.

SI'MPLIST. n. s. [from simple.] One skilled in simples.

A plant so unlike a rose, it hath been mistaken by some good simplists for anomum Brown's Vulgar Errours.

SI'MPLY. adv [from simple.]

1. Without art; without subtlety; plainly; artlessly.

Accomplishing great things by things deem'd weak,
Subverting worldly strong and worldly wise
By simply meek. Milton's Paradise Lost

2. Of itself; without addition.

This question about the changing of laws concerneth only such laws as are positive, and do make that now good or evil, by being commanded or forbidden, which otherwise of itself were not simply the one or the other Hooker

3. Merely; solely.

Under man, no creature in the world is capable of felicity and bliss, because their chiefest perfection consisteth in that which is best for them, but not in that which is simply best, as ours doth Hooker

I will eat and drink, and sleep as soft
As captain shall, simply the thing I am
Shall make me live. Shakesp

To say or to do aught with memory and imitation, no purpose or respect should sooner move us, than simply the love of God and of mankind. Milton

4. Foolishly; sillily.

SI'MULAR n. s. [from simulo, Lat.] One that counterfeits.

Hide thee, thou bloody hand,
Thou perjurer, thou simular of virtue,
That art incestuous. Shakesp King Lear

SIMULA'TION. n s. [simulation, Fr. simulatio, from simulo, Lat.] That part of hypocrisy which pretends that to be which is not.

Simulation is a vice rising of a natural falseness, or fearfulness, or of a mind that hath some main faults, which, because a man must needs disguise, it maketh him practise simulation. Bacon

For the unquestionable virtues of her person and mind, he well expressed his love in an act and time of no simulation towards his end, bequeathing her all his mansion-houses, and a power to dispose of his whole personal estate Wotton

For distinction sake, a deceiving by word is commonly called a lye, and deceiving by actions, gestures, or behaviour, is called simulation or hypocrisy South

SIMULTA'NEOUS. adj. [simultaneus, Lat.] Acting together; existing at the same time.

If the parts may all change places at the same time, without any respect of priority or posteriority to each other's motion, why may not bullets, closely crowded in a box, move by a like mutual and simultaneous exchange? Glanville

SIN. n. s. [ꝑyn, Sax.]

1. An act against the laws of God, a violation of the laws of religion.

It is great sin to swear unto a sin,
But greater sin to keep a sinful oath. Shakesp

How hast thou the heart,
Being a divine, a ghostly confessor,
A sin absolver, and my friend profest,
To mangle me with that word banishment? Shakesp

But those that sleep, and think not on their sins,
Pinch them Shakesp Merry Wives of Windsor

Thou knowest, Lord, that I am pure from all sin with man. Tob. iii. 14.

2. Habitual negligence of religion.

Sin, death, and hell, have set their marks upon him,
And all their ministers attend on him Shakesp

Dishonest shame
Of nature's works, honour dishonourable,
Sin-bred, how have ye troubled all mankind! Milton.

I would not soil these pure ambrosial weeds
With the rank vapours of the sin-worn mould. Milton.

Is there no means, but that a sin-sick land
Should be let blood with such a boist'rous hand? Daniel.

Vice or virtue chiefly imply the relation of our actions to men in this world, sin and holiness rather imply their relation to God and the other world Watts's Logick.

Light from her thought, a summer's careless robe,
Fell each affection of this sin-worn globe Brooke

3. It is used by Shakespeare emphatically for a man enormously wicked.

Thy ambition,
Thou scarlet sin, robb'd this bewailing land
Of noble Buckingham Shakesp Henry VIII

Th' inviolable body stood sincere Dryden.

2. Pure; unmingled.

Pardon my tears, 'tis joy which bids them flow,
A joy which never was sincere till now,
That which my conquest gave I could not prize,
Or 'twas imperfect, till I saw your eyes Dryden.

The pleasures of sense, beasts taste sincere and pure always, without mixture or allay, without being distracted in the pursuit, or disquieted in the use of them Atterbury.

Animal substances differ from vegetable, in that, being reduced to ashes, they are perfectly insipid, and in that there is no sincere acid in any animal juice Arbuthnot on Aliments.

In English I would have all Gallicisms avoided, that our tongue may be sincere, and that we may keep to our own language. Felton on the Classicks.

3. Honest; undissembling, uncorrupt.

This top proud fellow,
Whom from the flow of gall I name not, but
From sincere motions by intelligence
I do know to be corrupt Shakesp. Henry VIII

Nor troubled at these tidings from the earth,
Which your sincerest care could not prevent,
Foretold so lately what would come to pass,
When first this tempter cross'd the gulf from hell
Milton.

The more sincere you are, the better it will fare with you at the great day of account. In the mean while, give us leave to be sincere too, in condemning heartily what we heartily disapprove
Waterland.

Through the want of a sincere intention of pleasing God in all our actions, we fall into such irregularities of life as, by the ordinary means of grace, we should have power to avoid Law

SINCE'RELY. adv. [from sincere] Honestly; without hypocrisy, with purity of heart.

The purer and perfecter our religion is, the worthier effects it hath in them who stedfastly and sincerely embrace it. Hooker

A single concord in a double name Dryden.
High Alba,
A lonely desart, and an empty land,
Shall scarce afford, for needful hours of rest,
A single house to their benighted guest.
Addison on Italy
Where the poesy or oratory shines, a single reading is not sufficient to satisfy a mind that has a true taste; nor can we make the fullest improvement of them without proper reviews.
Watts on the Mind.

2. Particular; individual.
As no single man is born with a right of controuling the opinions of all the rest, so the world has no title to demand the whole time of any particular person. Pope
If one single word were to express but one simple idea, and nothing else, there would be scarce any mistake. Watts.

3. Not compounded.
As simple ideas are opposed to complex, and single ideas to compound, so propositions are distinguished: the English tongue has some advantage above the learned languages, which have no usual word to distinguish single from simple Watts

4. Alone; having no companion; having no assistant.
Servant of God, well hast thou fought
The better fight, who single hast maintain'd
Against revolted multitudes the cause of truth. Milton.

Whilst single he stood forth Denham.
In sweet possession of the fairy place,
Single, and conscious to myself alone
Of pleasures to th' excluded world unknown. Dryden.

5. Unmarried.
Is the single man therefore blessed? no as a walled town is more worthier than a village, so is the forehead of a married man more honourable than the bare brow of a bachelor. Shakesp
Pygmalion
Abhorr'd all womankind, but most a wife,
So single chose to live, and shunn'd to wed,
Well pleas'd to want a consort of his bed Dryden.

6. Not complicated; not duplicated.
To make flowers double, is effected by often removing them into new earth, as, on the contrary, double flowers, by neglecting and not removing, prove single. Bacon's Natural History

7. Pure; uncorrupt; not double-minded; simple. A scriptural sense.
The light of the body is the eye if thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light. Matt vi. 22

8. That in which one is opposed to one.
He, when his country, threaten'd with alarms,
Shall more than once the Punick bands affright,
Shall kill the Gaulish king in single fight.
Dryden's Æneid.

To SI'NGLE. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To chuse out from among others.
I saw him in the battle range about,
And how he singled Clifford forth Shakesp Henry VI

Wearied and gall'd with their necessities,
Durst have thought it? Ben Jonson's Catiline

Our soul, whose country's heav'n, and God her father,
Into this world, corruption's sink, is sent,
Yet so much in her travail she doth gather,
That she returns home wiser than she went Donne

SI'NLESS. adj. [from sin] Exempt from sin.

Led on, yet sinless, with desire to know
What nearer might concern him. Milton

At that tasted fruit
The sun, as from Thyestean banquet, turn'd
His course intended, else how had the world
Inhabited, though sinless, more than now
Avoided pinching cold, and scorching heat?
Milton.

Infernal ghosts and hellish furies round
Environ'd thee, some howl'd, some yell'd, some shriek'd,
Some bent at thee their fiery darts, while thou
Sat'st unappal'd in calm and sinless peace Milton.

No thoughts like mine his sinless soul profane,
Observant of the right. Dryden's Ovid

Did God, indeed, insist on a sinless and unerring observance of all this multiplicity of duties, had the Christian dispensation provided no remedy for our lapses, we might cry out with Balaam, Alas! who should live, if God did this? Rogers.

SI'NLESSNESS. n. s. [from sinless.] Exemption from sin.

We may the less admire at his gracious condescensions to those, the sinlessness of whose condition will keep them from turning his vouchsafements into any thing but occasions of joy and gratitude Boyle's Seraphick Love

SI'NNER. n. s. [from sin.]

1. One at enmity with God; one not truly or religiously good.

Let the boldest sinner take this one consideration along with him, when he is going to sin, that whether the sin he is about to act ever comes to be pardoned or no, yet, as soon as it is acted, it quite turns the balance, puts his salvation upon the venture, and makes it ten to one odds against him. South

Never consider yourselves as persons that are to be seen, admired, and courted by men, but as poor sinners, that are to save yourselves from the vanities and follies of a miserable world, by humility, devotion, and self-denial. Law.

2. An offender; a criminal.

Here 's that which is too weak to be a sinner, honest water, which never left man i' th' mire Shakesp. Timon.

SITHE. n s [ſiꝺe, Sax. This word is very variously written by authors I have chosen the orthography which is at once most simple and most agreeable to etymology] The instrument of mowing, a crooked blade joined at right angles to a long pole.

Let fame, that all hunt after in their lives,
Live register'd upon our brazen tombs,
And then grace us in the disgrace of death
When, spite of cormorant devouring time,
Th' endeavour of this present breath may buy
That honour, which shall bate his scythe's keen edge,
And make us heirs of all eternity Shakesp

Time is commonly drawn upon tombs, in gardens, and other places, an old man, bald, winged, with a sithe and an hour-glass Peacham on Drawing

There rude impetuous rage does storm and fret,
And there, as master of this murd'ring brood,
Swinging a huge sithe, stands impartial death,
With endless business almost out of breath Crashaw

While the milk-maid singeth blithe,
And the mower whets his scithe Milton

The brazen trumpets kindle rage no more,
But useless lances into sythes shall bend,
And the broad faulchion in a ploughshare end Pope

Grav'd o'er their seats the form of Time was found
His scythe revers'd, and both his pinions bound Pope

But, Stella, say what evil tongue
Reports you are no longer young?
That Time sits with his sythe to mow
Where erst sat Cupid with his bow? Swift

2. To lose the power of cohesion.

The fire, in lime burnt, has hid, so that it appears to be cold, but water excites it again, whereby it slacks and crumbles into fine powder
Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

3. To abate.

Whence these raging fires
Will slacken, if his breath stir not their flames
Milton.

4. To languish; to fail; to flag. Ainsw

To* SLACK. } To* SLACKEN. } v. a.

1. To loosen; to make less tight.

Ah! generous youth, that wish forbear
Slack all thy sails and fear to come Dryden

Had Ajax been employ'd, our slacken'd sails
Had still at Aulis waited happy gales Dryden

2. To relax; to remit

This makes the pulses beat, and lungs respire,
This holds the sinews like a bridle's reins,
And makes the body to advance, retire,
To turn, or stop, as she them slacks or strains.
Davies

Taught power's due use to people and to kings
Taught nor to slack nor strain its tender strings
Pope

3. To ease, to mitigate. Philips seems to have used it by mistake for slake

Men, having been brought up at home under a strict rule of duty, always restrained by sharp penalties from lewd behaviour, so soon as they come thither, where they see laws more slackly tended, and the hard restraint which they were used unto now slacked, they grow more loose Spenser

If there be cure or charm
To respite, or deceive, or slack the pain
Of this ill mansion Milton's Parad Lost

On our account has Jove,
Indulgent, to all moons some succulent plant
Allow'd, that poor helpless man might slack
His present thirst and matter find for toil Philips

4. To remit for want of eagerness.

My guards
Are you, great pow'rs, and the unbated strength
Of a firm conscience, which shall arm each step
To en for the state, and teach me slack no pace
Ben Jonson

With such delay well pleas'd, they slack their course Milton

5. To cause to be remitted, to make to abate.

You may sooner by imagination quicken or slack a motion, than raise or cease it, as it is easier to make a dog go slower than make him stand still Bacon

This doctrine must supersede and slacken all industry and endeavour, which is the lowest degree of that which hath been promised to be accepted by Christ, and leave nothing to us to deliberate or attempt, but only to obey our fate Hammond

Extol not riches then, the toil of fools,
The wise man's cumbrance, if not snare, more apt
To slacken virtue, and abate her edge,
Than prompt her to do aught may merit praise
Milton

Balls of this metal slack'd Atlanta's pace,
And on the am'rous youth bestow'd the race
Waller

One conducts to the poet's aim, which he is driving on in every line the other slackens his pace, and diverts him from his way Dryden

6. To relieve, to unbend.

Here have I seen the king, when great affair
Gave leave to slacken and unbend his cares,
Attended to the chase by all the flow'r
Of youth, whose hopes a nobler prey devour
Denham

7. To withhold, to use less liberally

He that so generally is good, must of necessity hold his virtue to you, whose worthiness would stir it up where it wanted, rather than slack it where there is such abundance Shakesp

8. To crumble; to deprive of the power of cohesion.

Some unslacked lime cover with ashes, and let it stand till rain comes to slack the lime, then spread them together Mortimer's Husbandry

9. To neglect.

Why might not you, my lord, receive attendance
From those that she calls servants, or from mine
If then they chanc'd to slack ye,
We could controul them Shakesp King Lear

This good chance, that thus much favoureth,
He slacks not. Daniel's Civil War
Slack not the good presage, while heav'n inspires
Our minds to dare, and gives the ready fires Dryd.

10. To repress; to make less quick or forcible.
I should be griev'd, young prince, to think my presence
Unbent your thoughts, and slacken'd 'em to arms Addison.

SLACK. n. s. [from the verb To slack.] Small coal, coal broken in small parts: as slacked lime turns to powder.

SLA'CKLY. adv. [from slack]
1. Loosely, not tightly; not closely.

Fought all his battles o'er again,
And thrice he routed all his foes, and thrice he slew the slain Dryden.

To SLAKE. v. a. [from slack, Skinner, from slock, Island. to quench, Mr. Lye]
1. To quench; to extinguish.
He did always strive
Himself with salves to health for to restore,
And slake the heavenly fire that raged evermore.
Spenser
If I digg'd up thy forefathers graves,
And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It could not slake mine ire, nor ease my heart
Shakesp. Henry VI
She with her cold hand slakes
His spirits, the sparks of life, and chills his heart
Crashaw
From Iulus' head
A lambent flame arose, which gently spread
Around his brow, and on his temples fed
Amaz'd, with running water we prepare
To quench the sacred fire, and slake his hair Dryd.
The fragrant fruit from bending branches shake,
And with the crystal stream their thirst at pleasure slake Blackmore's Creation
Coarse are his meals, the fortune of the chace,
Amidst the running stream he slakes his thirst
Addison's Cato

2. It is used of lime: so that it is uncertain whether the original notion of To slack or slake lime, be to powder or quench it.
That which he saw happened to be fresh lime, and gathered before any rain had fallen to slake it. Woodward.

To SLAKE. v n. [This is apparently from slack.]
1. To grow less tense, to be relaxed.
If she the body's nature did partake,
Her strength would with the body's strength decay,
But when the body's strongest sinews slake,
Then is the soul most active, quick, and gay Davies.

2. To go out; to be extinguished.
She perceiving that his flame did slake,
And lov'd her only for his trophy's sake Brown.

Slander Valentine
With falsehood, cowardice and poor descent Shak
He hath slandered thy servant unto the king
2 Sam xix 27
Give me leave to speak as earnestly in truly commending it, as you have done in untruly and unkindly defacing and slandering it Whitgifte
Thou dost with lies the throne invade,
By practice harden'd in thy sland'ring trade,
Obtending heav'n for whate'er ills befall,
And sputt'ring under specious names they gall. Dr
Of all her deeds she never slander'd one,
But cares not if a thousand are undone Pope

SLA'NDER n s [from the verb.]
1. False invective.
When slanders do not live in tongues,
When cut-purses come not to throngs
Shakesp. King Lear.
Since that, we hear he is in arms,
We think not so,
Yet charge the consul with our harms,
That let him go
So in our censure of the state
We still do wander,
And make the careful magistrate
The mark of slander Ben Jonson's Catiline
We are not to be dejected by the slanders and calumnies of bad men, because our integrity shall then be cleared by him who cannot err in judgment Nelson.

2 Disgrace; reproach.
Thou slander of thy mother's heavy womb!
Thou loathed issue of thy father's loins
Shakesp. Richard III.

3. Disreputation, ill name.
You shall not find me, daughter,
After the slander of most stepmothers,
Ill-eyed unto you Shakesp

SLA'NDERER n. s. [from slander.] One who belies another; one who lays false imputations on another.

SLEIGHT. n. s. [slag'd, cunning, Island.] Artful trick, cunning artifice; dexterous practice: as, sleight of hand, the tricks of a juggler. This is often written, but less properly, slight.

He that exhorted to beware of an enemy's policy, doth not give counsel to be impolite, but rather to be all prudent foresight, lest our simplicity be over-reached by cunning sleights. Hook

Fair Una to the red cross knight
Betrothed is with joy,
Though false Duessa, it to bar,
Her false sleights do employ. Fairy Queen

Upon the corner of the moon
There hangs a vap'rous drop profound,
I'll catch it ere it come to ground,
And that, distill'd by magick sleights,
Shall raise such artificial sprights,
As, by the strength of their illusion,
Shall draw him on to his confusion Shak. Macb

Out stept the ample size
Of mighty Ajax, huge in strength, to him, Laertes's son,
The crafty one as huge in sleight Chapman

She could not so convey
The massy substance of that idol great,
What sleight had she the wardens to betray?
What strength to heave the goddess from her seat? Fairfax

In the wily snake
Whatever sleights, none would suspicious mark,
As from his wit and native subtilty
Proceeding Milton.

Doubtless the pleasure is as great
Of being cheated, as to cheat,
As lookers on feel most delight,
That least perceive the juggler's sleight Hudib

Good humour is but a sleight of hand, or a faculty making truths look like appearances, or appearances like truths. L'Estrange

When we hear death related, we are all willing to favour the slight, when the poet does not too grossly impose upon us Dryden

While innocent he scorns ignoble flight,
His honest friends preserve him by a sleight Swift

Begin thy carols then, thou vaunting slouch,
Be thine the oaken staff, or mine the pouch Gay

To SLOUCH. v. n. [from the noun.] To have a downcast clownish look.

SLOVEN n. s. [sloef, Dut. yslyvn, Welsh, nasty, shabby] A man indecently negligent of cleanliness, a man dirtily dressed.

The ministers came to church in handsome holiday apparel, and that himself did not think them bound by the law of God to go like slovens. Hooker.

Affect in things about thee cleanliness,
That all may gladly board thee as a flow'r
Slovens take up their stock of nosomeness
Beforehand, and anticipate their last hour.
Herbert

You laugh, half beau, half sloven, if I stand,
My wig half powder, and all snuff my hand. Pope.

Their methods various, but alike their aim,
The sloven and the fopling are the same. Young

SLO'VENLINESS. n s [from slovenly.] Indecent negligence of dress; neglect of cleanliness.

Slovenliness is the worst sign of a hard student, and civility the best exercise of the remiss, yet not to be exact in the phrase of compliment, or gestures of courtesy Wotton

SLO'VENLY. adv. [from sloven.] Negligent of dress; negligent of neatness; not neat, not cleanly.

Æsop at last found out a slovenly lazy fellow, lolling at his ease, as if he had nothing to do L'Estrange

SLO'VENRY n. s. [from sloven] Dirtiness, want of neatness.

Our gayness and our guilt are all besmirch'd
With rainy marching in the painful field
There's not a piece of feather in our host,
And time hath worn us into slovenry
Shakesp Hen. V

SLOUGH n. s. [ſlog, Sax]

1. A deep miry place, a hole full of dirt.

The Scots were in a fallow field, whereinto the English could not enter, but over a cross ditch and a slough, in passing whereof many of the English horse were plunged, and some mired Hayward

The ways being foul, twenty to one
He's here stuck in a slough, and overthrown Milt

A carter had laid his waggon fast in a slough.
L'Estrange

2. The skin which a serpent casts off at his periodical renovation

Thy fates open their hands, let thy blood and spirits embrace them, and to mure thyself to what thou art like to be, cast thy humble slough, and appear fresh Shakesp Twelfth Night.

When the mind is quicken'd,
The organs, though defunct and dead before,
Break up their drowsy grave, and newly move,
With casted slough, and fresh legerity Shakesp

Oh let not sleep my closing eyes invade
In open plains, or in the secret shade,
When he, renew'd in all the speckled pride
Of pompous youth, has cast his slough aside,
And in his summer livery rolls along
Erect, and brandishing his forky tongue Dryden

The slough of an English viper, that is, the cuticula, they cast off twice every year, at spring and fall the separation begins at the head, and is finished in twenty-four hours Grew

The body, which we leave behind in this visible world, is as the womb or slough from whence we issue, and are born into the other Grew's Cosmol

3. It is used by Shakespeare simply for the skin.

As the snake, roll'd in a flow'ry bank,
With shining checker'd slough, doth sting a child,
That for the beauty thinks it excellent.
Shakesp Hen VI

4. The part that separates from a foul sore.

At the next dressing I found a slough come away with the dressings, which was the sordes.

SLOW. adj. [ſlap, ſleap, Sax. sleruw, Frisick.]

1. Not swift; not quick of motion; not speedy, not having velocity; wanting celerity.

Me thou think'st not slow,
Who since the morning hour set out from heav'n,
Where God resides, and on mid-day arriv'd
In Eden, distance inexpressible! Milton

Where the motion is so slow as not to supply a constant train of fresh ideas to the senses, the sense of motion is lost. Locke.

2. Late, not happening in a short time.

These changes in the heav'ns, though slow, produc'd
Like change on sea and land, sidereal blast. Milton.

3. Not ready; not prompt; not quick.

I am slow of speech, and a slow tongue Exod iv 10

Mine ear shall not be slow, mine eye not shut Milton.

The slow of speech make in dreams unpremeditated harangues, or converse readily in languages that they are but little acquainted with Addison.

For though in dreadful whirls we hung
High on the broken wave,
I knew thou wert not slow to hear,
Nor impotent to save Addison.

4. Dull; inactive; tardy; sluggish.

The blockhead is a slow worm Pope

Slow, in composition, is an adverb; slowly.

This slow-pac'd soul, which late did cleave
T' a body, and went but, by the body's leave,
Twenty perchance or thirty mile a day,
Dispatches in a minute all the way
T'wixt heav'n and earth Donne

To the shame of slow endeavouring art
Thy easy numbers flow. Milton.

This day's death denounc'd, if aught I see,
Will prove no sudden but a slow-pac'd evil,
A long day's dying to augment our pain. Milton.

For eight slow-circling years by tempests tost.
Pope

Some demon urg'd
T' explore the fraud with guile oppos'd to gulle,
Slow-pacing thrice around th' insidious pile. Pope

To SLOW. v. a. [from the adjective.] To omit by dilatoriness; to delay; to procrastinate. Not in use. The true word was forslow.

Now do you know the reason of this haste?
—I would I knew not why it should be slow'd.
Shakesp

SLO'WLY. adv. [from slow.]

The gnome rejoicing bears her gift away,
Spreads his black wings, and slowly mounts to day.
Pope.

2. Not soon; not early; not in a little time.

The poor remnant of human seed peopled their country again slowly, by little and little Bacon.

Our fathers bent their painful industry
To check a monarchy that slowly grew,
But did not France or Holland's fate foresee,
Whose rising power to swift dominion flew. Dryd.

We oft our slowly growing works impart,
While images reflect from art to art. Pope.

3. Not hastily; not rashly: as, he determines slowly.

4. Not promptly; not readily: as, he learns slowly.

5. Tardily; sluggishly.

The chapel of St. Laurence advances so very slowly, that 'tis not impossible but the family of Medicis may be extinct before their burial place is finished Addison on Italy.

SLO'WNESS. n. s. [from slow.]

1. Smallness of motion; not speed; want of velocity; absence of celerity or swiftness.

Providence hath confined these human hearts, that what any invention hath in the strength of its motion, is abated in the slowness of it and what it hath in the extraordinary quickness of its motion, must be allowed for in the great strength that is required unto it. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

Motion is the absolute mode of a body, but swiftness or slowness are relative ideas. Watts

2. Length of time in which any thing acts or is brought to pass; not quickness.

Tyrants use what art they can to increase the slowness of death. Hooker.

3. Dulness to admit conviction or affection.

To SLU'BBER. v a [probably from lubber.]

1. To do any thing lazily, imperfectly, or with idle hurry.

Nature shewed she doth not like men who slubber up matters of mean account. Sidney

Bassanio told him, he would make some speed
Of his return he answer'd, do not so,
Slubber not business for my sake.
Shakesp. Merchant of Venice

As they are slubbered over, the malignity that remains will show itself in some chronick disease. Wiseman's Surgery

2. To stain; to daub. [This seems to be from slobber, slabber, or slaver.]

You must be content to slubber the gloss of your new fortunes with this more stubborn and boisterous expedition. Shakesp

3. To cover coarsely or carelessly. This is now not in use, otherwise than as a low colloquial word.

A man of secret ambitious ends, and pernicious counsels, smothered under the habit of a schis-

ser, and stubbered over with a certain rude and clownish fashion, that had the semblance of integrity. Wotton

SLU'BBERDEGULLION. n. s. [I suppose a cant word without derivation.] A paltry, dirty, sorry wretch.

Quoth she, although thou hast deserv'd,
Base slubberdegullion, to be serv'd
As thou didst vow to deal with me,
If thou hadst got the victory Hudibras.

SLUDGE. n. s. [I suppose from plog slough, Sax.] Mire; dirt mixed with water.

The earth I made a mere soft sludge or mud. Mortimer

SLUG. n. s, [slug, Dan. and slock, Dut. signify a glutton, and thence one that has the sloth of a glutton.]

1. An idler; a drone; a slow, heavy, sleepy, lazy wretch.

Fie! what a slug is Hastings, that he comes not! Shakesp.

2. An hindrance; an obstruction.

3. A kind of slow creeping snail.

4. [plecz, an hammerhead, Sax.] A cylindrical or oval piece of metal shot from a gun.

When fractures are made with bullets or slugs, there the scalp and cranium are driven in together. Wiseman's Surgery.

As, forc'd from wind-guns, lead itself can fly,
And pond'rous slugs cut swiftly through the sky. Pope.

To SLUG. v. n. [from the noun] To lie idle; to play the drone; to move slowly.

All he did was to deceive good knights,
And draw them from pursuit of praise and fame,
To slug in sloth and sensual delights,
And end their days with irrenowned shame Fairy Queen

He lay not all night slugging in a cabin under his mantle, but used commonly to keep others waking to defend their lives. Spenser.

One went slugging on with a thousand cares. L'Estrange.

SLU'GGARD. n. s. [from slug.] An idler; a drone; an inactive lazy fellow.

Cry mercy, lords, and watchful gentlemen,
That you have ta'en a tardy sluggard here. Shakesp. Rich. III.

This mightier sound shall make
The dead to rise,
And open tombs and open eyes,
To the long sluggards of five thousand years. Cowl.

Up, up, says Avarice, thou snor'st again,
Stretchest thy limbs, and yawn'st, but all in vain
The tyrant Lucre no denial takes,
At his command th' unwilling sluggard wakes Dryden.

Sprightly May commands our youth to keep
The vigils of her night, and breaks their sluggard sleep. Dryden

To SLU'GGARDIZE. v a. [from sluggard.] To make idle, to make dronish.

Rather see the wonders of the world abroad,
Than, living dully sluggardiz'd at home,
Wear out thy youth with shapeless idleness. Shak

SLU'GGISH. adj. [from slug.] Dull, drowsy; lazy; slothful; idle, insipid, slow, inactive; inert.

Sluggish idleness, the nurse of sin,
Upon a slothful ass he chose to ride Fairy Queen

The dull billows, thick as troubled mire,
Whom neither wind out of their seat could force,
Nor tides did drive out of their slugg sh source Spenser

One, bolder than the rest,
With his broad sword provok'd the sluggish beast. Waller

Matter, being impotent, sluggish, and inactive, hath no power to move itself. Woodward.

SLU'GGISHLY. adv. [from sluggish.] Dully, not nimbly; lazily; idly, slowly.

SLU'GGISHNESS. n. s. [from sluggish] Dulness; sloth; laziness; idleness; inertness.

The most of mankind are inclined by their thither, if they would take the pains, no less than birds to fly, and horses to run which if they lose, it is through their own sluggishness, and by that means become her prodigies, not her children Ben Jonson.

It is of great moment to teach the mind to shake off its sluggishness, and vigorously employ itself about what reason shall direct. Locke

SLUICE. n. s. [sluyse, Dut. escluse, Fr. sclusa, Ital.] A watergate; a floodgate, a vent for water.

Two other precious drops, that ready stood
Each in their crystal sluice, he, ere they fell,
Kiss'd, as the gracious signs of sweet remorse,
And pious awe, that feard to have offended Milt

Divine Alpheus, who, by secret sluice,
Stole under seas to meet his Arethuse Milton.

If we receive them all, they were more than seven, if only the natural sluices, they were fewer. Brown's Vulg Err

As waters from her sluices, flow'd
Unbounded sorrow from her eyes Prior

Each sluice of affluent fortune open'd soon,
And wealth flow'd in at morning, night, and noon Harte

To SLUICE. v a. [from the noun.] To emit by floodgates.

Like a traitor coward,
Sluic'd out his innocent soul through streams of blood Shakesp

Veins of liquid ore sluic'd from the lake Milton

You wrong me, if you think I'll sell one drop
Within these veins for pageants, but let honour
Call for my blood, I'll sluice it into streams,
Turn fortune loose again to my pursuit,
And let me hunt her through her embattled foes,
In dusty plains, there will I be the first. Dryden's Spanish Fryar

SLU'ICY. adj. [from sluice.] Falling in streams as from a sluice or floodgate.

And oft whole sheets descend of sluicy rain,
Suck'd by the spungy clouds from off the main
The lofty skies at once come pouring down,
The promis'd crop and golden labours drown Dryden

To SLU'MBER. v. n. [plumepan, Sax. sluymeren, Dut.]

Why slumbers Pope, who leads the tuneful train,
Nor hears that virtue which he loves complain? Young

To SLU'MBER. v a.

1. To lay to sleep

2. To stupify; to stun.

Then up he took the slumber'd senseless corse,
And, ere he could out of his swoon awake,
Him to his castle brought Fairy Queen

To honest a deed after it was done, or to slumber his conscience in the doing, he studied other incentives. Wotton.

SLU'MBER. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Light sleep; sleep not profound.

And for his dreams, I wonder he's so fond
To trust the mock'ry of unquiet slumbers.
Shakesp Richard III.

From carelessness it shall fall into slumber, and from a slumber it shall settle into a deep and long sleep, till at last, perhaps, it shall sleep itself into a lethargy, and that such an one, that nothing but hell and judgment shall awaken it South

Labour and rest, that equal periods keep,
Obedient slumbers that can wake and weep Pope.

2. Sleep; repose

Boy! Lucius! fast asleep? It is no matter;
Enjoy the honey-heavy dew of slumber
Shakesp Julius Cæsar

Ev'n lust and envy sleep, but love denies
Rest to my soul, and slumber to my eyes
Three days I promis'd to attend my doom,
And two long days and nights are yet to come Dry

SLU'MBEROUS. SLU'MBERY. } adj [from slumber]

The snatches in his voice,
And burst of speaking, were as his Shak Cymbeline

They move by fits and snatches, so that it is not conceivable how they conduce unto a motion, which, by reason of its perpetuity, must be regular and equal Wilkins's Dædalus

We have often little snatches of sunshine and fair weather in the most uncomfortable parts of the year. Spectator

5 A quip, a shuffling answer.

Come, leave your snatches, yield me a direct answer Shakesp

SNA'TCHER. n. s [from snatch.] One that snatches or takes any thing in haste.

They of those marches
Shall be a wall sufficient to defend
Our inland from the pilfering borderers.
—We do not mean the coursing snatchers only,
But fear the main intendment of the Scot.
Shakesp. Henry V

SNA'TCHINGLY. adv. [from snatching.] Hastily, with interruption.

To SNEAK. v. n. [ȝnican, Sax. snige, Dan.]

1. To creep slily; to come or go as if afraid to be seen.

Once the eagle, England, being in prey,
To her unguarded nest the weasel Scot
Comes sneaking, and so sucks her princely eggs
Shakesp.

Sneak not away, sir, for the friar and you
Must have a word anon lay hold on him. Shak.

Discover'd, and defeated of your prey,
You skulk'd behind the fence, and sneak'd away
Dryden.

I ought not to turn my back, and to sneak off in silence, and leave the truth to lie baffled, bleeding, and slain Watts

He sneak'd into the grave,
A monarch's half, and half a harlot's slave
Dunciad.

Are you all ready? Here's your musick here
Author, sneak off, we'll tickle you, my dear More.

2. To behave with meanness and servility; to crouch; to truckle.

I need salute no great man's threshold, sneak to none of his friends to speak a good word for me to my conscience South

Nothing can support minds drooping and sneaking, and inwardly reproaching them, from a sense of their own guilt, but to see others as bad. South's Sermons

When int'rest calls off all her sneaking train,
When all th' oblig'd desert, and all the vain,
She waits, or to the scaffold, or the cell,
When the last ling'ring friend has bid farewell Pope.

Tom struts a soldier, open, bold, and brave,
Will sneaks a scriv'ner, an exceeding knave Pope.

SNE'AKER n. s. A small vessel of drink.

I have just left the right worshipful and his myrmidons about a sneaker of five gallons. Spectator.

To hope for quarter for your ears Hudibras.

2. In a covetous manner.

SNE'AKINGNESS n. s. [from sneaking.]

1. Niggardliness.

2. Meanness; pitifulness.

SNE'AKUP. n. s. [from sneak.] A cowardly, creeping, insidious scoundrel. Obsolete.

The prince is a jack, a sneakup, and if he were here, I would cudgel him like a dog, if he would say so Shakesp. Henry IV.

To SNEAP v a. [This word seems a corruption of snib, or of snap, to reprimand. Perhaps snap is in that sense from snib, snibbe, Dan.]

Men shulde him snibbe bitterly Chaucer.

1. To reprimand, to check.

2. To nip.

What may
Breed upon our absence, may there blow
No sneaping winds at home Shakesp.

SNEAP. n. s. [from the verb.] A reprimand; a check.

My lord, I will not undergo this sneap without reply you call honourable boldness impudent sauciness if a man will court'sy and say nothing he is virtuous. Shakesp. Henry IV.

To SNEB. v. a. [properly to snib. See SNEAP.] To check; to chide; to reprimand.

Which made this foolish briar wax so bold,
That on a time he cast him to scold
And snebbe the good oak, for he was old Spenser

To SNEER. v. n. [This word is apparently of the same family with snore and snort]

1. To show contempt by looks: naso suspendere adunco.

2. To insinuate contempt by covert expressions.

The wolf was by, and the fox in a sneering way advised him not to irritate a prince against his subjects. L'Estrange.

I could be content to be a little sneered at in a line, for the sake of the pleasure I should have in reading the rest Pope.

If there has been any thing expressed with too much severity, it will fall upon those sneering or daring writers of the age against religion, who have left reason and decency Watts.

3. To utter with grimace.

I have not been sneering fulsome lies, and nauseous flattery, at a little tawdry whore. Congreve

I had no power over one muscle in their faces, though they sneered at every word spoken by each other. Tatler

SNEER. n. s. [from the verb]

1. A look of contemptuous ridicule.
Did not the sneer of more impartial men,
At sense and virtue, balance all agen. Pope.

2. An expression of ludicrous scorn.
Socrates or Cæsar might have a fool's coat clapt upon them, and in this disguise neither the wisdom of the one, nor the majesty of the other, could secure them from a sneer Watts.

SNE'ERER. n. s. [from sneer.] He that sneers or shows contempt.

To SNEEZE. v. n. [ꝑneꝛan, Sax. niesen, Dut.] To emit wind audibly by the nose.
If one be about to sneeze, rubbing the eyes till tears run will prevent it, for that the humour descending to the nostrils is diverted to the eyes Bacon.
If the pain be more intense and deeper within, amongst the membranes, there will be an itching in the palate and nostrils, with frequent sneezing Wiseman's Surgery
To thee Cupid sneez'd aloud,
And every lucky omen sent before,
To meet thee landing on the Spartan shore Dryd
If any thing oppress the head, it hath a power to free itself by sneezing. Ray on the Creation.
Violent sneezing produceth convulsions in all the muscles of respiration so great an alteration can be produced only by the tickling of a feather, and if the action of sneezing should be continued by some very acrid substance, it will produce headach, universal convulsions, fever, and death Arbuthnot
An officer put the sharp end of his half-pike a good way up into my nostrils, which tickled my nose like a straw, and made me sneeze violently Swift

SNEEZE. n. s. [from the verb.] Emission of wind audibly by the nose.
I heard the rack,
As earth and sky would mingle, but
These flaws, though mortals fear them,
As dangerous to the pillar'd frame of heav'n,
Are to the main as wholesome as a sneeze
To man's less universe, and soon are gone.
Milton's Paradise Regained
We read in Godignus, that upon a sneeze of the emperor of Monomotapa there passed acclamations successively through the city. Brown's Vulg Err

SNE'EZEWORT. n. s. [ptarmica, Lat.] A plant.

What hath been seen
Either in snuffs or packings of the duke's,
Or the hard rain which both of them have borne
Against the old kind king Shakesp King Lear

Jupiter took snuff at the contempt, and punished him he sent him home again L'Estrange

6. Powdered tobacco taken by the nose.

Just where the breath of life his nostrils drew,
A charge of snuff the wily virgin threw,
The gnomes direct, to ev'ry atom just,
The pungent grains of titillating dust. Pope

To SNUFF. v. a. [snuffen, Dut.]

1. To draw in with the breath.

A heifer will put up her nose, and snuff in the air, against rain Bacon

With delight he snuff'd the smell
Of mortal change on earth Milton's Paradise Lost

He snuffs the wind, his heels the sand excite,
But when he stands collected in his might,
He roars, and promises a more successful fight. Dry

The youth,
Who holds the nearest station to the light,
Already seems to snuff the vital air,
And leans just forward on a shining spear,
Dryden's Eneid.

My troops are mounted, their Numidian steeds
Snuff up the wind, and long to scour the desert.
Addison.

My nag's greatest fault was snuffing up the air about Brackdenstown, whereby he became such a lover of liberty, that I could scarce hold him in Swift.

2. To scent.

The cow looks up, and from afar can find
The change of heav'n, and snuffs it in the wind.
Dryden.

For thee the bulls rebellow through the groves,
And tempt the stream, and snuff their absent loves
Dryden.

O'er all the blood-hound boasts superior skill,
To scent, to view, to turn, and boldly kill!
His fellows vain alarms rejects with scorn,
True to the master's voice, and learned horn
His nostrils oft, if ancient fame sing true,
Trace the sly felon through the tainted dew
Once snuff'd, he follows with unalter'd aim,
Nor odours lure him from the chosen game,
Deep-mouth'd he thunders, and inflam'd he views,
Springs on relentless, and to death pursues Tickel.

3. To crop the candle.

The late queen's gentlewoman!
To be her mistress' mistress!
This candle burns not clear 'tis I must snuff it,
And out it goes Shakesp Henry VIII

Against a communion-day our lamps should be dressed, our lights snuffed, and our religion more active. Taylor

You have got
An office for your talents fit,
To snuff the lights, and stir the fire,
And get a dinner for your hire Swift.

To SNUFF. v. n.

1. To snort; to draw breath by the nose.

The fury fires the pack; they snuff, they vent
And feed their hungry nostrils with the scent.
Dryden's Æneid

Says Humpus, Sir, my master bad me pray
Your company to dine with him to-day:
He snuffs, then follows, up the stairs he goes;
Never pulls off his hat, nor cleans his shoes.
King.

2. To snift in contempt.

Ye said, what a weariness is it, and ye have snuffed at it. Mal. ii. 13.

SNU'FFBOX. n. s. [snuff and box.] The box in which snuff is carried.

If a gentleman leaves a snuff box on the table, and goeth away, lock it up as part of your vails. Swift.

To SNU'FFLE. v. n. [snuffelen, Dut.] To speak through the nose, to breathe hard through the nose.

A water-spaniel came down the river, shewing that he hunted for a duck, and with a snuffling grace, disdaining that his smelling force could not as well prevail through the water as through the air, waited with his eye to see whether he could espy the duck's getting up again. Sidney.

Bagpipes of the loudest drones,
With snuffling broken-winded tones,
Whose blasts of air, in pockets shut,
Sound filthier than from the gut Hudibras.

It came to the ape to deliver his opinion, who smelt and snuffled, and considered on't. L'Estrange.

One clad in purple
Eats, and recites some lamentable rhyme,
Some senseless Phillis in a broken note,
Snuffling at nose, and croaking in his throat.
Dryden.

SNU'FFLER. n. s [from snuffle.] He that speaks through the nose.

To SNUG. v. n. [sniger, Dut.] To lie close.

There snugging well, he well appear'd content;
So to have done amiss, so to be shent. Sidney.

As the loving couple lay snugging together, Venus, to try if the cat had changed her manners with her shape, turned a mouse loose into the chamber. L'Estrange.

SNUG. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Close; free from any inconvenience, yet not splendid

They spied a country farm,
Where all was snug, and clean, and warm,
For woods before, and hills behind,
Secur'd it both from rain and wind Prior

2. Close, out of notice.

At Will's
Lie snug, and hear what criticks say. Swift

3. Slily or insidiously close.

So. adv. [ꝼpa, Sax. soo, Dut. so, Germ.]

1. In like manner. It answers to as either preceding or following. Noting comparison.

As whom the fables feign of monstrous size,
Titanian or earthborn, that warr'd on Jove,
So stretch'd out huge in length the arch fiend lay
Milton.

Thick as autumnal leaves that strew the brooks
In Valombrosa, where th' Etrurian shades
High over-arch'd embow'r, so thick bestrewn,
Abject and lost, lay these. Milton
Fir'd at first sight with what the muse imparts,
In fearless youth we tempt the heights of arts,
So pleas'd at first the tow'ring Alps we try,
Mount o'er the vales, and seem to tread the sky
Pope
As into air the purer spirits flow,
And sep'rate from their kindred dregs below,
So flew her soul to its congenial place. Pope.

2. To such a degree.

Why is his chariot so long in coming? Judg v. 28.
Can nothing great, and at the height,
Remain so long, but its own weight,
Will ruin it? Or is 't blind chance
That still desires new states t' advance?
Ben Jonson's Catiline.
Amoret, my lovely foe,
Tell me where thy strength does lie,
Where the pow'r that charms us so,
In thy soul, or in thy eye? Waller
I viewed in my mind, so far as I was able, the beginning and progress of a rising world
Burnet's Theory of the Earth
Since then our Arcite is with honour dead,
Why should we mourn that he so soon is freed.
Dryden
Upon our first going into a company of strangers, our benevolence or aversion rises towards several particular persons, before we have heard them speak, or so much as know who they are Addison's Spectator.
We think our fathers fools, so wise we're grown
Our wiser sons, no doubt, will think us so. Pope.

3. In such a manner.

There's no such thing as that we beauty call,
It is meer cosenage all,
For though some long ago
Lik'd certain colours mingled so and so,
That doth not tie me now from chusing new. Suck.
We may be certain that man is not a creature that hath wings; because this only concerns the manner of his existence, and we, seeing what he is, may certainly know that he is not so or so Locke
I shall minutely tell him the steps by which I was brought into this way, that he may judge whether I proceeded rationally, if so be any thing in my example is worth his notice Locke
This gentleman is a person of good sense, and knows that he is very much in Sir Roger's esteem, so that he lives in the family rather as a relation than dependent. Addison.

4. It is regularly answered by as or that, but they are sometimes omitted.

So frown'd the mighty combatants, that hell
Grew darker at their frown Milton.
There is something equivalent in France and Scotland, so as 'tis a very hard calumny upon our soil to affirm that so excellent a fruit will not grow here. Temple

5. In the same manner.

Of such examples add me to the roll,
Me easily indeed mine may neglect,
But God's propos'd deliverance not so. Milton.
To keep up the tutor's authority, use him with great respect yourself, and cause all your family to do so too. Locke
According to the multifariousness of this immutability, so are the possibilities of being Norris

6. Thus; in this manner.

Not far from thence the mournful fields appear,
So call'd from lovers that inhabit there Dryden
Does this deserve to be rewarded so?
Did you come here a stranger or a foe? Dryden
It concerns every man, with the greatest seriousness, to enquire into those matters, whether they be so or not Tillotson
No nation ever complained they had too broad, too deep, or too many rivers, they understand better than so how to value those inestimable gifts of nature Bentley
So when the first bold vessel dar'd the seas,
High on the stern the Thracian rais'd his strain
Pope
Whether this be from an habitual motion of the animal spirits, or from the alteration of the constitution by some more unaccountable way, this is certain, that so it is. Locke

7. Therefore; for this reason; in consequence of this.

The god, though loth, yet was constrain'd t' obey
For longer time than that no living wight
Below the earth might suffer'd be to stay:
So back again him brought to living light Fairy Q
Trafficke, or rove ye, and like theeves oppresse
Poor strange adventurers, exposing so
Your soules to danger, and your lives to wo,
Chapman.
If he set industriously and sincerely to perform the commands of Christ, he can have no ground of doubting but it shall prove successful to him, and so all that he hath to do is, to endeavour by prayer, and use of the means, to qualify himself for this blessed condition
Hammond's Fundamentals.
It leaves instruction, and so instructors, to the sobriety of the settled articles and rule of the church. Holyday
Some are fall'n, to disobedience fall'n,
And so from heav'n to deepest hell
Milton's Paradise Lost
God makes him in his own image an intellectual creature, and so capable of dominion Locke

8. On these terms; noting a conditional petition answered by as.

O goddess! tell what I would say,
Thou know'st it, and I feel too much to pray,
So grant my suit, as I enforce my might,
In love to be thy champion. Dryd Knight's Tale
Here then exchange we mutually forgiveness
So may the guilt of all my broken vows,
My perjuries to thee, be all forgotten,
As here my soul acquits thee of my death,
As here I part without an angry thought. Rowe
So may kind rains their vital moisture yield,
And swell the future harvest of thy field Pope

9. Provided that, on condition that: modo.

Be not sad
Evil into the mind of God or man
May come and go, so unapprov'd, and leave
No spot or blame behind Milton's Paradise Lost
So the doctrine be but wholesome and edifying, though there should be a want of exactness in the manner of speaking or reasoning, it may be overlooked. Atterbury
Too much of love thy hapless friend has prov'd,
Too many giddy foolish hours are gone,
May the remaining few know only friendship
So thou, my dearest, truest, best Alicia,
Vouchsafe to lodge me in thy gentle heart,
A partner there, I will give up mankind Rowe.

10. In like manner; noting concession of one proposition and assumption of another; answering to as

As a war should be undertaken upon a just motive, so a prince ought to consider the condition he is in when he enters on it. Swift

11. So sometimes returns the sense of a word or sentence going before, and is used to avoid repetition: as, the two brothers were valiant, but the eldest was more so; that is, more valiant. The French article le is often used in the same manner. This mode of expression is not to be used but in familiar language, nor even in that to be commended.

The fat with plenty fills my heart,
The lean with love makes me too so Cowley
Who thinks his wife is virtuous, though not so,
Is pleas'd and patient till the truth he know
Denham
Not to admire is all the art I know
To make men happy, and to keep them so
Creech's Horace
One may as well say, that the conflagration shall be only national, as to say that the deluge was so. Burnet
However soft within themselves they are,
To you they will be valiant by despair,
For having once been guilty, well they know,
To a revengul prince they still are so. Dryden
He was great ere fortune made him so Dryden.
I laugh at every one, said an old cynick, who laughs at me. Do you so? replied the philosopher, then you live the merriest life of any man in Athens Addison.
They are beautiful in themselves, and much more so in the noble language peculiar to that great poet. Addison.
Common-place books have been long used by industrious young divines, and still continue so Swift
As to his using ludicrous expressions, my opinion is, that they are not so Pope
The blast to-day is as completely so,
As who began a thousand years ago Pope

12. Thus it is; this is the state.

How sorrow shakes him!
So, now the tempest tears him up by th' roots,
And on the ground extends the noble ruin Dryd

13. At this point; at this time.

When
With wild wood-leaves and weeds I ha' strew'd his grave,
And on it said a century of prayers,
Such as I can, twice o'er, I'll weep and sigh,
And, leaving so his service, follow you Shakesp

14. It notes a kind of abrupt beginning; well.

O, so, and had you a council
Of ladies too? Who was your speaker, Madam?
Ben Jonson's Catiline

15 It sometimes is little more than an expletive, though it implies some latent or surd comparison In French si

An astringent is not quite so proper, where relaxing the urinary passages is necessary Arbuth

16 A word of assumption; thus be it.

There is Percy, if your father will do me any honour, so, if not, let him kill the next Percy himself Shakesp
I will never bear a base mind if it be my destiny, so, if it be not, so. No man is too good to serve his prince Shakesp

17. A form of petition

Ready are th' appellant and defendant,
The armourer and his man, to enter the lists,
So please your highness to behold the fight Shak.

18. So much as. However much. This is, I think, an irregular expression.

So much as you admire the beauty of his verse, his prose is full as good Pope

19 So so. An exclamation after something done or known. Corrupted, I think, from cessez.

I would not have thee linger in thy pain
So so Shakesp Othello.
So so, it works now, mistress, sit you fast
Dryden

20 So so. [cosi, cosi, Ital.] Indifferently; not much amiss nor well.

He's not very tall, yet for his years he's tall,
His leg is but so so, and yet 'tis well Shakesp.
Deliver us from the nauseous repetition of As and So, which some so so writers, I may call them so, are continually sounding in our ears.
Felton on the Classicks

21. So then. Thus then it is that; therefore

So then the Volscians stand but as at first
Ready, when time shall prompt them to make road
Upon 's again Shakesp Coriolanus
To a war are required a just quarrel, sufficient forces, and a prudent choice of the designs so then, I will first justify the quarrel, balance the forces, and propound designs. Bacon

To* SOAK. v. n. [rocian, Sax.]

1. To lie steeped in moisture

For thy conceit in soaking will draw in
More than the common blocks Shakesp.

2. To enter by degrees into pores.

Lay a heap of earth in great frosts upon a hollow vessel, putting a canvass between, and pour water upon it, so as to soak through it will make a harder ice in the vessel, and less apt to dissolve than ordinarily. Bacon.

Rain, soaking into the strata which lie near the surface, bears with it all such moveable matter as occurs Woodward

3 To drink gluttonously and intemperately This is a low term.

Let a drunkard see that his health decays, his estate wastes, yet the habitual thirst after his cups drives him to the tavern, though he has in his view the loss of health and plenty, the least of which he confesses is far greater than the tickling of his palate with a glass of wine, or the idle chat of a soaking club Locke

To SOAK. v. a.

1. To macerate in any moisture; to steep; to keep wet till moisture is imbibed, to drench.

Many of our princes
Lie drown'd and soak'd in mercenary blood
So do our vulgar drench their peasant limbs
In blood of princes Shakesp. Henry V.
Their land shall be soaked with blood
Isa xxxiv 7
There deep Galesus soaks the yellow sands.
Dryden

Wormwood, put into the brine you soak your corn in, prevents the birds eating it Mortimer

2. To draw in through the pores.

Thou, whose life 's a dream of lazy pleasure
'Tis all thy busʼness, busʼness how to shun,
To bask thy naked body in the sun,
Suppling thy stiffen'd joints with fragrant oil,
Then in thy spacious garden walk a while,
To suck the moisture up and soak it in Dryden

3. To drain, to exhaust. This seems to be a cant term, perhaps used erroneously for suck.

Plants that draw much nourishment from the earth, and soak and exhaust it, hurt all things that grow by them Bacon

A greater sparer than a saver, for though he had such means to accumulate, yet his forts, and his garrisons, and his feastings, wherein he was only sumptuous, could not but soak his exchequer Wotton.

SO'AKER. n. s. [from soak]

1. He that macerates in any moisture
2. A great drinker. In low language.

SOAP. n. s [ſape, Sax. sapo, Lat.] A substance used in washing, made of a lixivium of vegetable alkaline ashes and any unctuous substance.

Soap is a mixture of a fixed alkaline salt and oil, its virtues are cleansing, penetrating, attenuating, and resolving, and any mixture of any oily substance with salt may be called a soap Arbuthnot on Aliment

He is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers soap Malachi

A bubble blown with water, first made tenacious by dissolving a little soap in it, after a while will appear tinged with a great variety of colours Newton's Opticks

Soap-earth is found in great quantity on the land near the banks of the river Hermus, seven miles from Smyrna. Woodward

Soap-ashes are much commended, after the soap-boilers have done with them, for cold or sour lands Mortimer

As rain-water diminishes their salt, so the moistening of them with chamber-lee or soap-suds adds thereto Mortimer

SO'APBOILER n s. [soap and boil.] One whose trade is to make soap

A soapboiler condoles with me on the duties on castle-soap Addison's Spectator

SO'APWORT n. s [japonaria, Lat.] Is a species of campion. Miller.

To SOAR v. n. [sorare, Ital.]

1 To fly aloft; to tower; to mount, properly to fly without any visible action of the wings Milton uses it actively.

'Tis but a base ignoble mind
That mounts no higher than a bird can soar. Shak
Feather'd soon and fledg'd,
They summ'd their pens, and soaring th' air sublime,
With clang despis'd the ground. Milton

2. To mount intellectually; to tower with the mind.

How high a pitch his resolution soars. Shakesp
Valour soars above
What the world calls misfortune and affliction.
Addison

3. To rise high.

Who aspires must down as low
As high he soar'd. Milton.
Flames rise and sink by fits, at last they soar
In one bright blaze, and then descend no more.
Dryden.

When swallows fleet soar high, and sport in air,
He told us that the welkin would be clear Gay

SOAR. n. s. [from the verb.] Towering flight.

Within soar
Of tow'ring eagles, to all the fowls he seems
A phœnix Milton

To SOB. v. n. [ſeob complaining, Sax. Perhaps it is a mere onomatopœia copied from the sound.] To heave audibly with convulsive sorrow; to sigh with convulsion.

When thy warlike father, like a child,
Told the sad story of my father's death,
He twenty times made pause to sob and weep
Shakesp.

As if her life and death lay on his saying,
Some tears she shed, with sighs and sobbings mixt,
As if her hopes were dead through his delaying
Fairfax

She sigh'd, she sobb'd, and furious with despair
She rent her garments, and she tore her hair
Dryden

When children have not the power to obtain their desire, they will, by their clamour and sobbing, maintain their title to it. Locke on Education

I sobb'd, and with faint eyes
Look'd upwards to the Ruler of the skies Harte

SOB. n. s. [from the verb.] A convulsive sigh; a convulsive act of respiration obstructed by sorrow.

Break, heart, or choak with sobs my hated breath,
Do thy own work, admit no foreign death. Dryd.
There oft are heard the notes of infant woe,
The short thick sob, loud scream, and shriller squall
Pope.

A wond'rous bag with both her hands she binds
There she collects the force of female lungs,
Sighs, sobs, and passions, and the war of tongues.
Pope

To SOB. v. a. To soak. A cant word.

The tree being sobbed and wet, swells. Mortimer.

SO'BER. adj. [sobrius, Lat. sobre, Fr.]

1. Temperate, particularly in liquors; not drunken.

Live a sober, righteous, and godly life Com. Pr.
The vines give wine to the drunkard as well as to the sober man. Taylor's Worthy Communicant

No sober temperate person, whatsoever other sins he may be guilty of, can look with complacency upon the drunkenness and sottishness of his neighbour. South's Sermons.

2. Not overpowered by drink.

A law there is among the Grecians, whereof Pittacus is author, that he which being overcome with drink did then strike any man, should suffer punishment double as much as if he had done the same being sober Hooker

3. Not mad; right in the understanding.

Another, who had a great genius for tragedy, following the fury of his natural temper, made every man and woman in his plays stark raging mad, there was not a sober person to be had, all was tempestuous and blustering. Dryden.

No sober man would put himself into danger, for the applause of escaping without breaking his neck Dryden.

4 Regular; calm; free from inordinate passion.

This same young sober blooded boy a man cannot make him laugh. Shakesp.

Cieca travelled all over Peru, and is a grave and sober writer. Abbot's Description of the World.

Young men likewise exhort to be sober minded. Tit. ii. 6.

The governour of Scotland being of great courage and sober judgment, amply performed his duty both before the battle and in the field. Hayward.

These confusions disposed men of any sober understanding to wish for peace. Clarendon.

Among them some sober men confessed, that as his majesty's affairs then stood, he could not grant it. Clarendon.

To these that sober race of men, whose lives
Religious titled them the sons of God,
Shall yield up all their virtue, all their fame
Ignobly to the trains and to the smiles
Of these fair atheists Milton.

Be your designs ever so good, your intentions ever so sober, and your searches directed in the fear of God Waterland.

5. Serious, solemn; grave.

Petruchio
Shall offer me, disguis'd in sober robes,
To old Baptista as a schoolmaster. Shakesp.
Come, civil night,
Thou sober-suited matron, all in black. Shakesp.
Twilight grey
Had in her sober liv'ry all things clad. Milton.

What parts gay France from sober Spain?
A little rising rocky chain
Of men born south or north o' th' hill,
Those seldom move, these ne'er stand still. Prior.
For Swift and him despis'd the farce of state,
The sober follies of the wise and great. Pope.

See her sober over a sampler, or gay over a jointed baby. Pope.

To SO'BER. v. a. [from the adjective.] To make sober.

A little learning is a dangerous thing;
Drink deep, or taste not the Pierian spring;
There shallow draughts intoxicate the brain,
And drinking largely sobers us again. Pope.

SO'BERLY. adv. [from sober.]

1. Without intemperance.
2. Without madness.
3. Temperately, moderately.

Let any prince think soberly of his forces, except his militia of natives be valiant soldiers Bacon.

4. Coolly; calmly.

Whenever children are chastised, let it be done without passion, and soberly, laying on the blows slowly. Locke.

SO'BERNESS. n. s. [from sober.]

1. Temperance in drink.

Keep my body in temperance, soberness, and chastity. Common Prayer.

2. Calmness; freedom from enthusiasm; coolness.

A person noted for his soberness and skill in spagyrical preparations, made Helmont's experiment succeed very well. Boyle.

The soberness of Virgil might have shewn the difference. Dryden

SOBRI'ETY. n. s. [from sobrieté, Fr. sobrius, Lat.]

1. Temperance in drink; soberness.

Drunkenness is more uncharitable to the soul, and in scripture is more declaimed against, than gluttony, and sobriety hath obtained to signify temperance in drinking Taylor.

2. Present freedom from the power of strong liquor.
3. General temperance.

In setting down the form of common prayer, there was no need that the book should mention either the learning of a fit, or the unfitness of an ignorant, minister, more than that he which describeth the manner how to pitch a field, should speak of moderation and sobriety in diet. Hooker.

4. Freedom from inordinate passion.

The libertine could not prevail on men of virtue and sobriety to give up their religion. Rogers.

3. Calmness; coolness.
Enquire, with all sobriety and severity, whether there be in the footsteps of nature any such transmission of immaterate virtues, and what the force of imagination is. Bacon
Sobriety in our riper years is the effect of a well concocted warmth, but where the principles are only phlegm, what can be expected but an insipid manhood, and old infancy? Dryden.
If sometimes Ovid appears too gay, there is a secret gracefulness of youth which accompanies his writings, though the stayedness and sobriety of age be wanting. Dryden.
4. Seriousness; gravity.
A report without truth, and, I had almost said, without any sobriety or modesty Waterland.
Mirth makes them not mad,
Nor sobriety sad. Denham.

SO'CCAGE. n. s. [soc, Fr. a ploughshare; soccagium, barbarous Lat.] In law, is a tenure of lands for certain inferiour or husbandly services to be performed to the lord of the see; all services due for land being knight's service, or soccage: so that whatever is not knight's service, is soccage. This soccage is of three kinds; a soccage is of free tenure, where a man holdeth by free service of twelve pence a-year for all manner of services. Soccage of ancient tenure is of land of ancient demesne, where no writ original shall be used, but the writ secundum consuetudinem manerii. Soccage of base tenure is where those who hold it may have none other writ but the monstraverunt, and such sockmen hold not by certain service. Cowell.
The lands are not holden at all of her majesty, or not holden in chief, but by a mean tenure in soccage, or by knight's service Bacon

SO'CCAGER. n. s. [from soccage.] A tenant by soccage.

SO'CIABLE. adj. [sociable, Fr. sociabilis, Lat.]
1. Fit to be conjoined.
Another law toucheth them, as they are sociable parts united into one body, a law which bindeth them each to serve unto other's good, and all to prefer the good of the whole before whatsoever their own particular Hooker
2. Ready to unite in a general interest.
To make man mild and sociable to man,
To cultivate the wild licentious savage
With wisdom, discipline Addison's Cato.
3. Friendly; familiar; conversible.
Them thus employ'd beheld
With pity heav'n's high King, and to him call'd
Raphael, the sociable spirit that deign'd
To travel with Tobias Milton.
4. Inclined to company.
In children much solitude and silence I like not, nor any thing born before his time, as this must need. be in that sociable and exposed age Wotton

SO'CIABLENESS. [from sociable.]
1. Inclination to company and converse.
Such as would call her friendship love, and feign
To sociableness a name profane. Donne
The two main properties of man are contemplation, and sociableness, or love of converse More
2. Freedom of conversation, good fellowship.
He always used courtesy and modesty, disliked of none, sometimes sociableness and fellowship, well liked by many Hayward

SO'CIABLY. adv. [from sociable.] Conversibly; as a companion.
Yet not terrible,
That I should fear; nor sociably mild,
As Raphael, that I should much confide,
But solemn and sublime. Milton.

SO'CIAL. adj. [socialis, Lat.]
1. Relating to a general or publick interest; relating to society.
To love our neighbour as ourselves, is such a fundamental truth for regulating human society, that by that alone one might determine all the cases in social morality Locke
True self-love and social are the same. Pope
2. Easy to mix in friendly gaiety; companionable.
Withers, adieu! yet not with thee remove
Thy martial spirit or thy social love. Pope
3. Consisting in union or converse with another.
Thou in thy secrecy although alone,
Best with thyself accompanied, seek'st not
Social communication. Milton

SO'CIALNESS. n. s. [from social.] The quality of being social.

SOCI'ETY. n. s. [societé, Fr. societas, Lat.]
1. Union of many in one general interest.
If the power of one society extend likewise to the making of laws for another society, as if the church could make laws for the state in temporals, or the state make laws binding the church relating to spirituals, then is that society entirely subject to the other Lesley
2. Numbers united in one interest, community.
As the practice of piety and virtue is agreeable to our reason, so is it for the interest of private persons and publick societies Tillotson
3. Company; converse.
To make society
The sweeter welcome, we will keep ourself
Till supper-time alone Shakesp. Macbeth
Whilst I was big in clamour, there came a man,
Who, having seen me in my worser state,
Shunn'd my abhorr'd society Shakesp. K. Lear
Solitude sometimes is best society,
And short retirement urges sweet return Milton.
4. Partnership, union on equal terms.
Among unequals what society can sort? Milton.
Heaven's greatness no society can bear,
Servants he made, and those thou want'st not here
Dryden

SOCK. n. s. [soccus, Lat. ꝑocc, Sax. socke, Dut.]
1. Something put between the foot and shoe.
Ere I lead this life long, I'll sow nether socks and mend them, and foot them too Shak. Henry IV
A physician, that would be mystical, prescribeth for the rheum to walk continually upon a camomile alley, meaning he should put camomile within his socks Bacon
2. The shoe of the ancient comick actors, taken in poems for comedy, and opposed to buskin or tragedy.
Then to the well-trod stage anon,
If Jonson's learned sock be on,
Or sweetest Shakespeare, fancy's child,
Warble his native wood-notes wild. Milton.
Great Fletcher never treads in buskins here,
Nor greater Jonson dares in socks appear,
But gentle Simplin just reception finds
Amidst the monument of vanish'd minds Dryden.
On two figures of actors in the villa Mathei at Rome, we see the fashion of the old sock and larva Addison

SO'CKET. n. s [souchette, Fr.]
1. Any hollow pipe, generally the hollow of a candlestick.
Two goodly beacons, set in watches stead,
Therein gave light, and flam'd continually,
For they of living fire most subtilly
Were made, and set in silver sockets bright
Fairy Queen
She at your flames would soon take fire,
And like a candle in the socket
Dissolve. Hudibras.
The nightly virgin sees,
When sparkling lamps their sputtring light advance,
And in the sockets only bubbles dance. Dryden.
The stars amaz'd ran backward from the sight,
And, shrunk within their sockets, lost their light
Dryden
Two dire comets
In their own plague and fire have breath'd their last,
Or dimly in their sinking sockets frown Dryden.
To nurse up the vital flame as long as the matter will last, is not always good husbandry, it is much better to cover it with an extinguisher of honour, than let it consume till it burns blue, and lies agonizing within the socket, and at length goes out in no perfume. Collier
2. The receptacle of the eye.
His eye-balls in their hollow sockets sink,
Bereft of sleep, he loaths his meat and drink,
He withers at his heart, and looks as wan
As the pale spectre of a murder'd man Dryden
3 Any hollow that receives something inserted.
The sockets and supporters of flowers are figured, as in the five brethren of the rose, and sockets of gillyflowers Bacon
Gomphosis is the connection of a tooth to its socket Wiseman
As the weight leans wholly upon the axis, the grating and rubbing of these axes against the sockets wherein they are placed will cause some inaptitude and resistency to that rotation of the cylinder which would otherwise ensue Wilkins
On either side the head produce an ear,
And sink a socket for the shining share Dryden

SO'CKETCHISEL. n. s. A stronger sort of chisel
Carpenters, for their rougher work, use a stronger sort of chisels, and distinguish them by the name of socketchisels, their shank made with a hollow socket at top, to receive a strong wooden sprig made to fit into the socket Moxon

SOFT. adj [ꝛopt, Sax. saft, Dut.]

1. Not hard

Hard and soft are names we give things, only in relation to the constitutions of our own bodies, that being called hard, which will put us to pain sooner than change figure, by the pressure of any part of our bodies, and that soft, which changes the situation of its parts upon an easy touch Locke

Some bodies are hard, and some soft the hardness is caused by the jejuneness of the spirits, which, if in a greater degree, make them not only hard, but fragil Bacon

Hot and cold were in one body fixt,
And soft with hard, and light with heavy mixt Dryden

2. Not rugged; not rough.

What went ye out for to see? a man clothed in soft raiment? behold, they that wear soft raiment are in kings houses Matthew

Would my heart were flint like Edward's
Or Edward's soft and pitiful, like mine Shakesp.

Our torments may become as soft as now severe Milton.

Yet soft his nature though severe his lay,
His anger moral, and his wisdom gay Pope

7. Meek; civil, complaisant

Thou art their soldier, and, being bred in broils,
Hast not the soft way, which thou dost confess
Were fit for thee to use, as they to clum,
In asking their good loves Shakesp Coriolanus

8 Placid, still, easy

On her soft axle while she paces even,
She bears the soft with the smooth air along Milt

Then, soft extended to the murmuring sound
Of the high porch, Ulysses sleeps profound Pope

9. Effeminate; vitiously nice.

This sense is also mistress of an art
Which to soft people sweet perfumes doth sell,
Though this dear art doth little good impart,
Since they smell best that do of nothing smell Davies

An idle and soft course of life is the source of criminal pleasures Broome.

10. Delicate; elegantly tender.

Her form more soft and feminine Milton.
Less winning soft, less amiably mild. Milton.

Gentle, and low, an excellent thing in women. Shakesp

The Dorian mood of flutes and soft recorders Milton.

When some great and glorious monarch dies,
Soft whispers first, and mournful murmurs, rise,
Among the sad attendants, then the sound
Soon gathers voice Dryden

Soft whispering thus to Nestor's son,
His head reclin'd, young Ithacus begun Pope

13. Smooth, flowing, not vehement; not rapid.

The solemn nightingale tun'd her soft lays. Milton.

Soft were my numbers, who could take offence,
When smooth description held the place of sense? Pope

Hark! the numbers soft and clear
Gently steal upon the ear Pope

14. Not forcible, not violent.

Sleep falls with soft slumb'rous weight. Milton.

15. Mild, not glaring

If I soil
Myself with sin, I then but vainly toil Sandys
I would not soil these pure ambrosial weeds
With the rank vapours of this sin-worn mould
Milton.
Bad fruit of knowledge, if this be to know,
Which leaves us naked thus, of honour void,
Of innocence, of faith, of purity,
Our wonted ornaments now soil'd and stain'd
Milton
One, who could not for a taste o' th' flesh come in,
Licks the soil'd earth,
While reeking with a mangled Ombit's blood
Tate
If the eye-glass be tinctcd faintly with the smoke of a lamp or torch, to obscure the light of the star, the fainter light in the circumference of the star ceases to be visible, and the star, if the glass be sufficiently soiled with smoke, appears something more like a mathematical point.
Newton
An absent hero's bed they sought to soil,
An absent hero's wealth they made their spoil
Pope

SO'NGISH adj. [from song.] Containing songs, consisting of songs. A low word

The songish part must abound in the softness and variety of numbers, its intention being to please the hearing Dryden.

SO'NGSTER. n s. [from song] A singer. Used of human singers, it is a word of slight contempt.

The pretty songsters of the spring, with their various notes, did seem to welcome him as he passed Howel.

Some songsters can no more sing in any chamber but their own, than some clerks read in any book but their own L'Estrange

Either songster holding out their throats,
And folding up their wings, renew'd their notes
Dryden.

SO'NGSTRESS. n. s. [from song] A female singer.

Through the soft silence of the listening night
The sober-suited songstress trills her lay
Thomson's Summer,

SO'NNET. n. s. [sonnet, Fr. sonnetto, Ital.]

1. A short poem consisting of fourteen lines, of which the rhymes are adjusted by a particular rule. It is not very suitable to the English language; and has not been used by any man of eminence since Milton, of whose sonnets this is a specimen.

A book was writ of late call'd Tetrachordon,
And woven close, both matter, form, and stile,
The subject new it walk'd the town a-while,
Numb'ring good intellects, now seldom por'd on Cries the stall-reader, Bless us, what a word on
A title-page is this! and some in file
Stand spelling false, while one might walk to Mile-End-green Why is it harder, sirs, than Gordon,
Colkitto, or Macdonnel, or Galasp?
Those rugged names to our like mouths grow sleek,
That would have made Quintilian stare and gasp,
Thy age, like ours, soul of Sir John Cheek,
Hated not learning worse than toad or asp,
When thou taught'st Cambridge and king Edward Greek Milton.

2 A small poem.

Let us into the city presently,
To sort some gentlemen well skill'd in musick,
I have a sonnet that will serve the turn Shakesp

SONNE'TTEER. n. s [sonnetier, Fr. from sonnet] A small poet, in contempt.

Assist me, some extemporal god of rhime; for I am sure I shall turn sonnetteer
Shakesp Love's Labour Lost.

There are as many kinds of gardening as of poetry your makers of parterres and flower-gardens are epigrammatists and sonnetteers in this art.
Spectator.

What woful stuff this madrigal would be,
In some starv'd hackney sonnetteer or me!
But let a lord once own the happy lines,
How the wit brightens! how the style refines!
Pope.

SO'NIFEROUS. adj. [sonus and fero, Lat.] Giving or bringing sound.

This will appear, let the subject matter of sounds be what it will, either the atmosphere, or the etherial part thereof, or soniferous particles of bodies. Derham.

SONORI'FICK. adj. [sonorus and facio. Lat.] Producing sound.

If he should ask me why a clock strikes, and points to the hour, and I should say, it is by an indicating form and sonorifick quality, this would be unsatisfactory. Watts's Logick.

SONO'ROUS. adj. [sonore, Fr. sonorus, Lat.]

1. Loud sounding; giving loud or shrill sound. Bodies are distinguished as sonorous or unsonorous.

All the while
Sonorous metal blowing martial sounds,
At which the universal host up sent
A shout that tore hell's concave
Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. High sounding; magnificent of sound.

The Italian opera, amidst all the meanness and familiarity of the thoughts, has something beautiful and sonorous in the expression. Addison on Italy.

The vowels are sonorous. Dryden.

SONO'ROUSLY. adv. [from sonorous.] With high sound; with magnificence of sound.

SONO'ROUSNESS. n. s. [from sonorous.]

1. The quality of giving sound.

Enquiring of a maker of viols and lutes of what age he thought lutes ought to be, to attain their full and best seasoning for sonorousness, he replied, That in some twenty years would be requisite, and in others forty Boyle.

2. Magnificence of sound.

SOON. adv. [suns, Goth. ϸona, Sax. soen, Dut.]

1. Before long time be past; shortly after any time assigned or supposed.

Nor did they not perceive their evil plight,
Yet to their general's voice they soon obey'd.
Milton.

You must obey me, soon or late;
Why should you vainly struggle with your fate?
Dryden

2. Early; before any time supposed: opposed to late.

O boy! thy father gave thee life too soon,
And hath bereft thee of thy life too late.
Shakesp Henry VI.

Do this, that I may be restored to you the sooner.

4. It has in Sidney the signification of an adjective, whether licentiously or according to the custom of his time.

He hath preserved Argalus alive, under pretence of having him publickly executed after these wars, of which they hope for a soon and prosperous issue Sidney.

5. Soon as. Immediately; at the very time.

As soon as he came nigh unto the camp, he saw the calf and the dance. Ex xxxii 19.
Nor was his virtue poison'd, soon as born,
With the too early thoughts of being king Dryd.
Feasts, and business, and pleasures, and enjoyments, seem great things to us, whilst we think of nothing else, but as soon as we add death to them, they all sink into an equal littleness Law.

SO'ONLY. adv. [from soon] Quickly, speedily. This word I remember in no other place; but if soon be, as it seems once to have been, an adjective, soonly is proper.
A mason meets with a stone that wants no cutting, and, soonly approving of it, places it in his work. More.

SO'OPBERRY. n. s. [sapindus, Lat] A plant. Miller.

SOOT. n. s. [ꝑoc, Sax. soet, Island. soct Dut.] Condensed or embodied smoke.
Soot, though thin spread in a field, is a very good compost. Bacon
If the fire be not kept within the tunnel of the chimney, and some appointed to sweep down the soot, the house will be in danger of burning. Howel
Oft they assay'd,
Hunger and thirst constraining, drugg'd as oft
With hatefullest disrelish, writh'd their jaws,
With soot and cinders fill'd Milton's Par Lost
Our house hold gods, that droop upon our hearths,
Each from his venerable face shall brush
The Macedonian soot, and shine again
Dryden's Cleomene s

SO'OTED. adj. [from soot.] Smeared, manured, or covered with soot.
The land was sooted before Mortimer

SO'OTERKIN. n s A kind of false birth fabled to be produced by the Dutch women from sitting over their stoves.
When Jove was, from his teeming head,
Of wit's fair goddess brought to bed,
There follow'd at his lying-in,
For after-birth a sooterkin Swift

SOOTH. n s. [ꝑoð, Sax.] Truth; reality Obsolete.
Sir, understand you this of me in sooth,
The youngest daughter, whom you hearken for,
Her father keeps from all access of suitors,
Until the eldest sister first be wed Shakesp
He looks like sooth he says he loves my daughter,
I think so too, for never gaz'd the moon
Upon the water, as he'll stand and read
My daughter's eyes Shakesp Winter's Tale
If I have any skill in soothsaying as in sooth I have none, it doth prognosticate that I shall change caps Camden's Remains
The very sooth of it is, that an ill habit has the force of an ill fate. L'Estrange.
I did not mean to chide you,
For sooth to say, I hold it noble in you
To cherish the distress'd Rowe.

SOOTH. adj. [ꝑoð, Sax.] Pleasing, delightful.
Some other means I have,
Which once of Meliboeus old I learn'd,
The soothest shepherd that e'er pip'd on plains Milton

SOOTH. n. s. Sweetness; kindness. This seems to be the meaning here.
That e'er this tongue of mine,
That laid the sentence of dread banishment
On yond proud man, should take it off again
With words of sooth! Shakesp Richard II

To SOOTH. v. a. [ꝑeoðian, Sax.]
1. To flatter; to please with blandishments.
In soothing them, we nourish 'gainst our senate
The cockle of rebellion, insolence, sedition Shak
Can I sooth tyranny?
Seem pleas'd to see my royal master murder'd,
His crown usurp'd, a distaff in the throne? Dryd
By his fair daughter is the chief confin'd,
Who sooths to dear delight his anxious mind,
Successless all her soft caresses prove,
To banish from his breast his country's love
Pope's Odyssey
Thinks he that Memnon, soldier as he is,
Thoughtless and dull, will listen to his soothing?
Rowe
I've tried the force of every reason on him,
Sooth'd and caress'd, been angry, sooth'd again,
Laid safety, life, and interest in his sight,
But all are vain, he scorns them all for Cato.
Addison's Cato
2. To calm; to soften; to mollify
The beldame
Sooths her with blandishments, and frights with threats Dryden

3. Black, dark, dusky.
All the grisly legions that troop
Under the sooty flag of Acheron,
Harpies and Hydras, and all monstrous forms
Milton
Swift on his sooty pinions flits the gnome,
And in a vapour reach'd the gloomy dome Pope

To SOO'TY v. a. [from soot.] To make black with soot
Then (for his own weeds) shirt and coat all rent,
Taint'd and all sooted with noisome smoke
She put him on, and over all a cloke Chapman

SOP. n. s. [ꝑop, Sax. sopa, Span. soppe, Dut.]
1. Any thing steeped in liquor, commonly to be eaten.
The bounded waters
Would lift their bosoms higher than the shores,
And make a sop of all this solid globe Shakesp
Draw, you rogue! for though it be night, yet the moon shines I'll make a sop o' th' moonshine of you Shakesp
Sops in wine, quantity for quantity, inebriate more than wine of itself Bacon's Nat Hist
2. Any thing given to pacify, from the sop given to Cerberus
The prudent Sibyl had before prepar'd
A sop, in honey steep'd, to charm the guard,
Which, mix'd with powerful drugs, she cast before
His greedy grinning jaws, just op'd to roar Dryd
Ill nature is not cured with a sop, quarrelsome men, as well as quarrelsome curs, are worse for fair usage. L'Estrange.
To Cerberus they give a sop,
His tripple barking mouth to stop Swift.

To SOP. v. a. To steep in liquor

SOPE. n. s. [See SOAP]

SOPH. n. s. [from sophista, Lat] A young man who has been two years at the university.

A fig for the sultan and sophi. Congreve

SO'PHISM n. s [sophisma Lat] A fallacious argument, an unsound subtilty; a fallacy
When a false argument puts on the appearance of a true one, then it is properly called a sophism or fallacy Watts
I, who as yet was never known to show
False pity or premeditated woe,
Will graciously explain great nature's laws,
And hear thy sophisms in so plain a cause Harte

SO'PHIST n s [sophista, Lat] A professor of philosophy
The court of Croesus is said to have been much resorted to by the sophists of Greece, in the happy beginning of his reign Temple

SO'PHISTER n s [sophiste, Fr sophista, Lat]
1 A disputant fallaciously subtle, an artful but insidious logician
A subtle traitor needs no sophister Shak H VI
If a heathen philosopher brings arguments from reason, which some of our atheistical sophisters can confute, for the immortality of the soul, I hope they will so weigh the consequences, as neither to talk nor live as if there was no such thing. Denh
Not all the subtle objections of sophisters and rabbies, against the gospel, so much prejudiced the reception of it, as the reproaches of those crimes with which they aspersed the assemblies of christians Rogers
2 A professor of philosophy, a sophist This sense is antiquated
Alcidimus the sophister hath arguments to prove that voluntary and extemporal larcy deth premeditated speech Hooker

SOPHI'STICAL adj. [sophistique, Fr from sophist] Fallaciously subtle, logically deceitful
Neither know I whether I should prefer for madness, and sophistical cozenage, that the same body of Christ should be in a thousand places at once of this sublunary world Hall
When the state of the controversy is well understood, the difficulty will not be great in giving answers to all his sophistical cavils Stillingfleet
That may seem a demonstration for the present which to posterity will appear a mere sophistical knot Mint

SOPHI'STICALLY. adv [from sophistical] With fallacious subtility.

To SOPHI'STICATE v a. [sophistiquer, Fr. from sophist] To adulterate, to corrupt with something spurious
If the passions of the mind be strong, they easily so intricate the understanding, they make it apt to believe upon every slender warrant, and to imagine infallible truth where scarce any probable shew appeareth Hooker
Here's three of us are sophisticated. Shakesp
Diverse experiments succeeded not, because they were at one time tried with genuine materials, and at another time with sophisticated ones Boyle

The only persons amongst the heathens, who sophisticated nature and philosophy, were the Stoicks, who affirmed a fatal, unchangeable, concatenation of causes, reaching even to the elicite acts of man's will South's Sermons.

Yet the rich cullies may their bousting spare,
They purchase but sophisticated ware
'Tis prodigality that buys deceit,
Where both the giver and the taker cheat. Dryd

The eye hath its coats and humours transparent and colourless, lest it should tinge and sophisticate the light that it lets in by a natural jaundice Bentley

SOPHI'STICATE part. adj. [from the verb.] Adulterate, not genuine.

Wine sparkles brighter for than she,
'Tis pure and right, without deceit,
And that no woman e'er will be,
No, they are all sophisticate Cowley

Since then a great part of our scientifical treasure is most likely to be adulterate, though all bears the image and superscription of truth, the only way to know what is sophisticate and what is not so, is to bring all to the examen of the touchstone Glan.

So truth, when only one supplied the state,
Grew scarce and dear, and yet sophisticate Dryden.

SOPHISTICA'TION. n. s. [sophistication, Fr. from sophisticate] Adulteration, not genuineness

Sophistication is the act of counterfeiting or adulterating any thing with what is not so good, for the sake of unlawful gain Quincy

The drugs and simples sold in shops generally are adulterated by the fraudulent avarice of the sellers, especially if the preciousness may make their sophistication very beneficial. Boyle

Besides easy submission to sophistications of sense, we have inability to prevent the miscarriages of our junior reasons Glanville

SOPHISTICA'TOR n. s [from sophisticate] Adulterator; one that makes things not genuine

SO'RCERER. n. s. [sorcier, Fr. sortiarius, low Lat.] A conjurer; an enchanter, a magician.

They say this town is full of cosenage,
As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye,
Drug-working sorcerers that change the mind,
Soul-killing witches that deform the body,
And many such like libertines of sin Shakesp

The weakness of the power of witches upon kings and magistrates may be ascribed to the weakness of imagination, for it is hard for a witch or a sorcerer to put on a belief that they can hurt such Bacon's Natural History.

He saw a sable sorcerer arise,
All sudden gorgons hiss, and dragons glare,
And ten horn'd fiends Pope.

The Egyptian sorcerers contended with Moses, but the wonders which Moses wrought did so far transcend the power of magicians, as made them confess it was the finger of God Watts's Logick

SO'RCERESS. n. s. [female of sorcerer.] A female magician, an enchantress.

Bring forth that sorceress condemn'd to burn. Shak.

Divers witches and sorceresses have fed upon man's flesh, to aid their imagination with high and foul vapours Bacon.

The snaky sorceress that sat,
Just by hell-gate, and kept the fatal key,
Ris'n, and with hideous outcry rush'd between Milton.

How cunningly the sorceress displays
Her own transgressions, to upbraid me mine! Milt

SO'RCEROUS. adj. Containing enchantments. A word not used.

Th' art cut'ring Circe's house,
Where by her med'cines, black and sorcerous,
Thy souldiers all are shut in well-arm'd sties,
And turn'd to swine Chapman

SORCERY. n. s Magick; enchantment, conjuration; witchcraft, charms.

This witch Sycorax,
For mischiefs manifold, and sorceries terrible,
Was banish'd Shakesp

All bodies have spirits and pneumatical parts within them, but the main difference between animate and inanimate are, that the spirits of things animate are all continued within themselves, and branched in veins as blood is, and the spirits have also certain seats where the principal do reside and whereunto the rest do resort but the spirits in things inanimate are shut in and cut off by the tangible parts, as air in snow Bacon's Natural History
The balmy spirit of the western breeze Anon.
2. [Esprit, Fr] An immaterial substance, an intellectual being.
Spirit is a substance wherein thinking, knowing, doubting, and a power of moving, do subsist. Locke
She is a spirit, yet not like air or wind,
Nor like the spirits about the heart or brain,
Nor like those spirits which alchymists do find,
When they in ev'ry thing seek gold in vain
For she all natures under heav'n doth pass,
Being like those spirits which God's bright face do see,
Or like himself, whose image once she was,
Though now, alas! she scarce his shadow be
For of all forms she holds the first degree,
That are to gross material bodies knit,
Yet she herself is bodyless and free,
And though confin'd is almost infinite Davies
I shall depend upon your constant friendship, like the trust we have in benevolent spirits, who, though we never see or hear them, we think are constantly praying for us Pope
If we seclude space, there will remain in the world but matter and mind, or body and spirit Watts's Logick.
You are all of you pure spirits. I don't mean that you have not bodies that want meat and drink, and sleep and clothing, but that all that deserves to be called you, is nothing else but spirit Law.

SPRI'GGY. adj. [from sprig.] Full of small branches.

SPRIGHT. n. s. [contraction of spirit; spiritus, Lat. It was anciently written sprete or spryte; and spirit, as now written, was long considered in verse as a monosyllable: this word should therefore be spelled sprite, and its derivatives spritely, spriteful; but custom has determined otherwise.]

1. Spirit; shade; soul; incorporeal agent.

She doth display
The gate with pearls and rubies richly dight,
Through which her words so wise do make their way,
To bear the message of her spright Spenser

Forth he called out of deep darkness dread
Legions of sprights, the which, like little flies
Flutt'ring about his ever damned head,
Await whereto their service he applies Fairy Q

While with heav'nly charity she spoke,
A streaming blaze the silent shadows broke,
The birds obscene to forests wing'd their flight,
And gaping graves receiv'd the guilty spright Dry.

Of these am I who thy protection claim,
A watchful sprite, and Ariel is my name. Pope

2. Walking spirit; apparition.

The ideas of goblins and sprights have no more to do with darkness than light, yet let but a foolish maid inculcate these often on the mind of a child, possibly he shall never be able to separate them again. Locke.

3. Power which gives cheerfulness or courage.

O chastity! the chief of heav'nly lights,
Which mak'st us most immortal shape to wear,
Hold thou my heart, establish thou my sprights,
To only thee my constant course I bear,
Till spotless soul unto my bosom fly,
Such life to lead, such death I vow to die. Sidney.

4. An arrow. Not in use.

We had in use for sea fight short arrows called sprights, without any other heads save wood sharpened, which were discharged out of muskets, and would pierce through the sides of ships where a bullet would not. Bacon's Natural History

Tell me, in what happy fields
The thistle springs, to which the lily yields? Pope

2. To begin to grow.

That the nipples should be made with such perforations as to admit passage to the milk when drawn, otherwise to retain it, and the teeth of the young not sprung, are effects of providence Ray

3. To proceed as from seed.

Ye shall eat this year such things as grow of themselves, and in the second year that which springeth of the same. 2 Kings.

Much more good of sin shall spring. Milton

4. To come into existence; to issue forth

Hadst thou sway'd as kings should do,
Giving no ground unto the house of York,
They never then had sprung like summer flies Shakesp.

Ev'n thought meets thought, ere from the lips it part,
And each warm wish springs mutual from the heart. Pope

5. To arise; to appear; to begin to appear or to exist.

When the day began to spring, they let her go Judges.

To them which sat in the region and shadow of death, light is sprung up Matthew, iv 16.

Fly, fly, prophane fogs! far hence fly away,
Taint not the pure streams of the springing day
With your dull influence it is for you
To sit and scoule upon night's heavy brow. Cras.

Do not blast my springing hopes,
Which thy kind hand has planted in my soul. Rowe

6. To issue with effect or force.

Swift fly the years, and rise th' expected morn!
Oh spring to light, auspicious babe, be born! Pope.

7. To proceed as from ancestors, or a country.

How youngly he began to serve his country,
How long continued, and what stock he springs of,
The noble house of Marcius Shakesp Coriolanus

Our Lord sprang out of Judea Heb vii. 14.

All these
Shall, like the brethren sprung of dragon's teeth,
Ruin each other, and he fall amongst 'em B Jons

Heroes of old, by rapine and by spoil,
In search of fame did all the world embroil,
Thus to their gods each then allied his name,
This sprang from Jove, and that from Titan came Granville

8. To proceed as from a ground, cause, or reason.

They found new hope to spring
Out of despair Milton

Some have been deceived into an opinion, that the inheritance of rule over men, and property in things, sprang from the same original, and descend by the same rules Locke

9. To grow; to thrive.

What makes all this but Jupiter the king,
At whose command we perish and we spring?
Then 'tis our best, since thus ordain'd to die,
To make a virtue of necessity Dryd Knight's Tale.

10. To bound; to leap; to jump; to rush hastily; to appear suddenly.

Some strange commotion
Is in his brain, he bites his lip, and starts,
Stops on a sudden, looks upon the ground,
Then lays his finger on his temple, straight
Springs out into fast gait, then stops again Shakesp Henry VIII

I sprang not more in joy at first hearing he was a man child, than now in first seeing he had proved himself a man Shaksp

He called for a light, and sprang in, and fell before Paul Acts

When heav'n was nam'd, they loos'd their hold again,
Then sprung she forth, they follow'd her amain Dryden.

Afraid to sleep,
Her blood all fever'd, with a furious leap
She sprung from bed. Dryden

Nor has she long, but, as her fates ordain,
Springs up to life, and, fresh to second pain,
Is sav'd to-day, to-morrow to be slain Dryden

See, aw'd by heav'n, the blooming Hebrew flies
Her artful tongue, and more persuasive eyes,
And, springing from her disappointed arms,
Prefers a dungeon to forbidden charms Blackmore

The mountain stag that springs
From height to height, and bounds along the plains,
Nor has a master to restrain his course,
That mountain stag would Vanoe rather be
Than be a slave Philip's Briton.

11. To fly with elastick power; to start.

A link of horsehair, that will easily slip, fasten to the end of the stick that springs Mort. Husband.

12. To rise from a covert.

My doors are hateful to my eyes,
Fill'd and damn'd up with gaping creditors,
Watchful as fowlers when their game will spring Otway.

A covey of partridges springing in our front, put our infantry in disorder. Addison.

13. To issue from a fountain.

Israel's servants digged in the valley, and found a well of springing water. Gen. xxvi 19.

Let the wide world his praises sing,
Where Tagus and Euphrates spring,
And from the Danube's frosty banks to those
Where from an unknown head great Nilus flows. Roscommon

14. To proceed as from a source.

'Tis true from force the noblest title springs,
I therefore hold from that which first made kings Dryden.

15. To shoot; to issue with speed and violence.

Then shook the sacred shrine, and sudden light
Sprung thro' the vaulted roof, and made the temple bright

The pow'r, behold! the pow'r in glory shone
By her bent bow and her keen arrows known. Dryden

The friendly gods a springing gale enlarg'd,
The fleet swift tilting o'er the surges flew,
Till Grecian cliffs appear'd. Pope.

To SPRING. v. s.

1. To start; to rouse game.

Thus I reclaim'd my bussard love to fly
At what, and when, and how, and where I chose,
Now negligent of sport I lie,
And now, as other fawkners use,
I spring a mistress, swear, write, sigh, and die,
And the game kill'd, or lost, go talk or lie. Donne.

That sprung the game you were to set,
Before you'd time to draw the net. Hudibras.

A large cock pheasant he sprung in one of the neighbouring woods. Addison's Spectator

Here I use a great deal of diligence before I can spring any thing, whereas in town, whilst I am following one character, I am crossed by another, that they puzzle the chase. Addison.

See how the well-taught pointer leads the way!
The scent grows warm, he stops, he springs the prey Gay

2. To produce quickly or unexpectedly.

The nurse, surpris'd with fright,
Starts up and leaves her bed, and springs a light. Dryden

Thus man by his own strength to heav'n would soar,
And would not be oblig'd to God for more
Vain, wretched creature, how art thou misled,
To think thy wit these godlike notions bred!
These truths are not the product of thy mind,
But dropt from heav'n, and of a nobler kind
Reveal'd religion first inform'd thy sight,
And reason saw not, till faith sprung the light. Dryden

He that has such a burning zeal, and springs such mighty discoveries, must needs be an admirable patriot Collier

3. To make by starting: applied to a ship.

People discharge themselves of burdensome reflections, as of the cargo of a ship that has sprung a leak L'Estrange

No more accuse thy pen, but charge the crime
On native sloth, and negligence of time
Beware the publick laughter of the town,
Thou sprung'st a leak already in thy crown. Dryd.

Whether she sprung a leak, I cannot find,
Or whether she was overset with wind,
But down at once with all her crew she went. Dryden.

4. To discharge: applied to a mine.

Our miners discovered several of the enemies mines, who have sprung divers others which did little execution Tatler

I sprung a mine, whereby the whole nest was overthrown Addison's Spectator.

5. To contrive on a sudden; to produce hastily; to offer unexpectedly.

The friends to the cause sprung a new project, and it was advertised that the Crisis could not appear till the ladies had shewn their zeal against the Pretender Swift.

6. To pass by leaping. A barbarous use.

Unbeseeming skill
To spring the fence, to rein the prancing steed Thomson.

7. Of the verb spring the primary sense is to grow out of the ground: so plants spring, thence spring for the season; so water springs, thence spring for a fountain. Plants rise unexpectedly, and waters break out violently, thence any thing done suddenly, or coming hastily, is said to spring; thence spring means an elastick body. Thus the active significations all import suddenness or force.

SPRING. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The season in which plants rise and vegetate, the vernal season.

Orpheus with his lute made trees,
And the mountain-tops that freeze,
Bow themselves when he did sing:
To his musick plants and flowers
Ever sprung, as sun and showers
There had made a lasting spring. Shak. H VIII

The spring visiteth not these quarters so timely as the eastern parts. Carew.

Come, gentle spring, ethereal mildness, come,
And from the bosom of yon dropping cloud
Upon our plains descend. Thomson's Spring.

2. An elastick body; a body which, when distorted, has the power of restoring itself to its former state.

This may be performed by the strength of some such spring as is used in watches: this spring may be applied to one wheel, which shall give an equal motion to both the wings Wilkins.

The spring must be made of good steel, well tempered, and the wider the two ends of the spring stand asunder, the milder it throws the chape of the vice open Moxon's Mechanical Exerc

He that was sharp-sighted enough to see the configuration of the minute particles of the spring of a clock, and upon what peculiar impulse its elastick motion depends, would no doubt discover something very admirable Locke.

3. Elastick force.

Heav'ns, what a spring was in his arm, to throw!
How high he held his shield, and rose at ev'ry blow! Dryden

Bodies which are absolutely hard, or so soft as to be void of elasticity, will not rebound from one another impenetrability makes them only stop. If two equal bodies meet directly in vacuo, they will by the laws of motion stop where they meet, lose their motion, and remain in rest, unless they be elastick, and receive new motion from their spring Newton.

The soul is gathered within herself, and recovers that spring, which is weakened when she operates more in concert with the body Addison

In adult persons, when the fibres cannot any more yield, they must break, or lose their spring Arbuthnot.

4. Any active power; any cause by which motion or action is produced or propagated.

My heart sinks in me while I hear him speak,
And every slacken'd fibre drops its hold,
Like nature letting down the springs of life,
So much the name of father awes me still Dryden.

Nature is the same, and man is the same, has the same affections and passions, and the same springs that give them motion Rymer.

Our author shuns by vulgar springs to move Pope.

5. A leap; a bound; a jump; a violent effort; a sudden struggle.

The prisoner with a spring from prison broke,
Then stretch'd his feather'd fans with all his might,
And to the neighb'ring maple wing'd his flight. Dryden.

With what a spring his furious soul broke loose,
And left the limbs still quivering on the ground! Addison's Cato.

6. A leak; a start of plank.

Each petty hand
Can steer a ship becalm'd, but he that will
Govern, and carry her to her ends, must know
His tides, his currents, how to shift his sails,
Where her springs are, her leaks, and how to stop 'em. Ben Jonson's Catiline

7. A fountain; an issue of water from the earth.

Now stop thy springs; my sea shall suck them dry,
And swell so much the higher by their ebb Shakesp Henry VI

Springs on the tops of hills pass through a great deal of pure earth, with less mixture of other waters Bacon's Natural History

When in th' effects she doth the causes know,
And seeing the stream, thinks where the spring doth rise,
And seeing the branch, conceives the root below,
These things she views without the body's eyes Davies.

He adds the running springs and standing lakes,
And bounding banks for winding rivers makes. Dryden.

Nile hears him knocking at his seven-fold gates,
And seeks his hidden spring, and fears his nephew's fates. Dryden.

Who, stock and spangled with your flatteries,
Washes it off, and sprinkles in your faces
Your reeking villany. Shakesp. Timon of Athens.

SPRI'NGTIDE. n. s. [spring and tide.] Tide at the new and full moon; high tide.

Love, like springtides, full and high,
Swells in every youthful vein,
But each tide does less supply,
Till they quite shrink in again
If a flow in age appear,
'Tis but rain, and runs not clear.
Dryden's Tyrannick Love.

Most people die when the moon chiefly reigns; that is, in the night, or upon or near a springtide.
Grew's Cosmologia.

SPRI'NGY. adj. [from springe.]

1. Elastick; having the power of restoring itself.

Had not the Maker wrought the springy frame,
Such as it is, to fan the vital flame,
The blood, defrauded of its nitrous food,
Had cool'd and languish'd in th' arterial road,
While the tir'd heart had strove, with fruitless pain,
To push the lazy tide along the vein.
Blackmore's Creation.

This vast contraction and expansion seems unintelligible, by feigning the particles of air to be springy and ramous, or rolled up like hoops, or by any other means than a repulsive power. Newton.

Though the bundle of fibres which constitute the muscles may be small, the fibres may be strong and springy. Arbuthnot.

If our air had not been a springy body, no animal could have exercised the very function of respiration, and yet the ends of respiration are not served by that springyness, but by some other unknown quality. Bentley's Sermons

We'll hear poor rogues
Talk of court news, and we'll talk with them too,
And take upon's the mystery of things,
As if we were God's spies Shakesp. King Lear
Spies of the Volscians
Held me in chase, that I was forc'd to wheel
Three or four miles about. Shakesp. Coriolanus
Every corner was possessed by diligent spies upon their master and mistress Clarendon
I come no spy,
With purpose to explore, or to disturb,
The secrets of your realm. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Such command we had,
To see that none thence issued forth a spy,
Or enemy, while God was in his work Milton.
Nothing lies hid from radiant eyes,
All they subdue become their spies
Secrets, as chosen jewels, are Presented to oblige the fair Waller
Over my men I'll set my careful spies,
To watch rebellion in their very eyes Dryden.
These wretched spies of wit must then confess,
They take more pains to please themselves the less Dryden.
Those who attend on their state, are so many spies placed upon them by the publick to observe them nearly. Atterbury

To SPY. v. a. [See SPY. n. s.]

1. To act or pass, in consequence of compression.

A concave sphere of gold filled with water and soldered up, upon pressing the sphere with great force, let the water squeeze through it, and stand all over its outside in multitudes of small drops, like dew, without bursting or cracking the body of the gold. Newton's Opticks.

What crowds of these, impenitently bold,
In sounds and jingling syllables grown old,
Still run on poets, in a raging vein,
Ev'n to the dregs and squeezings of the brain Pope.

2. To force way through close bodies.

Many a public minister comes empty in, but when he has crammed his guts, he is fain to squeeze hard before he can get off L'Estrange.

SQUEEZE. n. s. [from the verb.] Compression; pressure.

A subtle artist stands with wond'rous bag,
That bears imprison'd winds, of gentler sort
Than those that erst Laertes' son enclos'd
Peaceful they sleep, but let the tuneful squeeze
Of lab'ring elbow rouse them, out they fly
Melodious, and with spritely accents charm. Philips.

SQUELCH. n. s. Heavy fall. A low ludicrous word.

He tore the earth which he had sav'd
From squelch of knight, and storm'd and rav'd Hudibras

So soon as the poor devil had recovered the squelch, away he scampers, bawling like mad L'Estrange

SQUIB. n. s. [schieben, Germ. to push forward. This etymology, though the best that I have found, is not very probable]

1. A small pipe of paper filled with wild fire. Used in sport.

The armada at Calais, Sir Walter Raleigh was wont prettily to say, were suddenly driven away with squibs, for it was no more than a stratagem of fire-boats manless, and sent upon them Bacon's War with Spain.

The forest of the south compareth the French valour to a squib, or fire of flax, which burns and crackles for a time, but suddenly extinguishes Howel's Vocal Forest

Lampoons like squibs, may make a present blaze,
But time, and thunder, pay respect to bays. Waller.

Furious he begins his march,
Drives rattling o'er a brazen arch,
With squibs and crackers arm'd, to throw
Among the trembling crowd below Swift.

Criticks on verse, as squibs on triumphs wait,
Proclaim the glory, and augment the state Young

Knights, squires, and steeds must enter on the stage. Pope.

3. An attendant at court.

Return with her!—I could as well be brought
To knee his throne, and squire-like pension beg,
To keep base life a-foot. Shakesp. King Lear

SQUI'RREL. n. s. [escurueil, Fr. sciurus, Lat.] A small animal that lives in woods, remarkable for leaping from tree to tree.

One chanc'd to find a nut,
In th' end of which a hole was cut,
Which lay upon a hazel-root,
There scatter'd by a squirrel,
Which out the kernel gotten had,
When quoth this fay, Dear queen, be glad,
Let Oberon be ne'er so mad,
I'll set you safe from peril Drayton.

To SQUIRT. v. a. [Of uncertain etymology] To throw out in a quick stream.

Sir Roger she mortally hated, and used to hire fellows to squirt kennel water upon him as he passed along Arbuthnot

To SQUIRT v. n. To prate; to let fly. Low cant.

You are so given to squirting up and down, and chattering, that the world would say, I had chosen a jack-pudding for a prime minister. L'Estrange

SQUIRT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. An instrument by which a quick stream is ejected.

He with his squirt-fire could disperse
Whole troops. Hudibras.

His weapons are, a pun to scratch, and a squirt to bespatter. Pope

2. A small quick stream.

Water those with squirts of an infusion of the medicine in dunged water. Bacon's Nat. Hist

SQUI'RTER. n. s. [from squirt.] One that plies a squirt.

The squirters were at it with their kennel water, for they were mad for the loss of their bubble Arbuthnot.

To STAB. v. a. [staven, old Dut.]

1. To pierce with a pointed weapon.

Hear the lamentations of poor Anne,
Wife to thy Edward, to thy slaughter'd son,
Stabb'd by the self-same hand that made these wounds Shakesp.

Porcius, think thou seest thy dying brother
Stabb'd at his heart, and all besmear'd with blood,
Storming at thee! Addison's Cato

2. To wound mortally or mischievously.

What tears will then be shed!
Then, to complete her woes, will I espouse
Hermione 'twill stab her to the heart! A. Philips.

To STAB. v. n.

1. To give a wound with a pointed weapon.

None shall dare
With shorten'd sword to stab in closer war,
But in fair combat fight. Dryden's Knight's Tale

Killing a man with a sword or a hatchet, are looked on as no distinct species of action, but if the point of the sword first enter the body, it passes for a distinct species where it has a distinct name, as in England, where it is called stabbing Locke

2. To offer a stab.

Thou hid'st a thousand daggers in thy thoughts,
Which thou hast whetted on thy stony heart,
To stab at my frail life Shakesp. Henry IV.

STABI'LITY. n. s [stabilité, Fr. from stabilitas, Lat.]

1 Stableness; steadiness; strength to stand.

By the same degrees that either of these happen, the stability of the figure is by the same lessened Temple.

These mighty girders which the fabrick bind,
These ribs robust and vast in order join'd,
Such strength and such stability impart,
That storms above, and earthquakes under ground,
Break not the pillars Blackmore.

He began to try
This and that hanging stone's stability. Cotton.

2. Fixedness; not fluidity.

Since fluidness and stability are contrary qualities, we may conceive that the firmness or stability of a body consists in this, that the particles which compose it do so rest, or are intangled, that there is among them a mutual cohesion. Boyle.

3. Firmness of resolution.

STA'BLE. adj. [stable, Fr. stabilis, Lat.]

1. Fixed; able to stand.

2. Steady; constant; fixed in resolution or conduct.

I would with jockeys from Newmarket dine,
And to rough riders give my choicest wine
I would caress some stableman of note,
And imitate his language and his coat. Brampton.

STA'BLENESS. n. s. [from stable.]

1. Power to stand.

2 Steadiness; constancy; stability.

The king becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temp'rance, stableness,
Bounty, perseverance, I have no relish of them. Shakesp.

STA'BLESTAND. n. s. [In law.] Is one of the four evidences or presumptions, whereby a man is convinced to intend the stealing of the king's deer in the forest: and this is when a man is found at his standing in the forest, with a cross bow bent, ready to shoot at any deer; or with a long bow; or else standing close by a tree with grey hounds in a leash ready to slip. Cowell.

I'll keep my stablestand where I lodge my wife;
I'll go in couples with her. Shakesp.

To STA'BLISH. v. a. [establir, Fr. stabilio, Lat.] To establish; to fix; to settle.

Then she began a treaty to procure,
And stablish terms betwixt both their requests. Spenser.

Stop effusion of our Christian blood,
And stablish quietness on every side. Shak. Hen. VI.

Comfort your hearts, and stablish you in every good work. 2 Thess. ii. 17.

Poor heretics in love there be,
Which think to stablish dangerous constancy;
But I have told them, since you will be true,
You shall be true to them who're false to you. Donne.

His covenant sworn
To David, stablish'd as the days of heav'n. Milton.

STACK. n. s. [stacca, Ital.]

1. A large quantity of hay, corn, or wood, heaped up regularly together.

Against every pillar was a stack of billets above a man's height, which the watermen that bring wood down the Seine laid there. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

While the marquis and his servant on foot were chasing the kid about the stack, the prince from horseback killed him with a pistol. Wot. Buckingh.

While the cock
To the stack or the barn-door
Stoutly struts his dame before. Milton.

STAFF. n. s. plur. staves. [ſtæf, Sax. staf, Dan. staf, Dut.]

1. A stick with which a man supports himself in walking.

It much would please him,
That of his fortunes you would make a staff
To lean upon. Shakespeare's Ant and Cleop.

Grant me and my people the benefit of thy chastisements, that thy rod as well as thy staff may comfort us. King Charles.

Is it probable that he, who had met whole armies in battle, should now throw away his staff out of fear of a dog? Broome.

2. A prop; a support.

Hope is a lover's staff, walk hence with that,
And manage it against despairing thoughts. Shak.

The boy was the very staff of my age, my very prop. Shakespeare

If a subject be a son, then ought he to be a staff unto his father, wherewith not to strike, but to sustain him. Holiday

3. A stick used as a weapon; a club; the handle of an edged or pointed weapon. A club properly includes the notion of weight, and the staff of length.

I cannot strike at wretched kernes, whose arms
Are hir'd to bear their staves. Shakesp. Macbeth.

He that bought the skin ran greater risque than t'other that sold it, and had the worse end of the staff L'Estrange

With forks and staves the felon they pursue Dryd.

4. Any long piece of wood.

He forthwith from the glitt'ring staff unfurl'd
Th' imperial ensign Milton.

To his single eye, that in his forehead glar'd
Like a full moon, or a broad burnish'd shield,
A forky staff we dext'rously applied,
Which, in the spacious socket turning round,
Scoopt out the big round jelly from its orb Addis.

That from the hunter's aim had ta'en a hurt,
Did come to languish Shakesp. As you like it.

The swift stag from under ground
Bore up his branching head Milton.

Th' inhabitants of seas and skies shall change,
And fish on shore, and stags in air shall range. Dry.

The stag
Hears his own feet, and thinks they sound like more,
And fears his hind legs will o'ertake his fore. Pope.

STAGE. n. s. [estage, Fr.]

1. A floor raised to view, on which any show is exhibited; a raised floor of temporary use.

2. The theatre; the place of scenick entertainments.

And much good do 't you then,
Brave plush and velvet men
Can feed on ort, and, safe in your stage clothes,
Dare quit, upon your oaths,
The stagers and the stage wrights too. Ben Jonson.

Those two Mytilene brethren, basely born, crept out of a small gallipot unto the majesty of great kings. Herein admire the wonderful changes and chances of these worldly things, now up, now down, as if the life of man were not of much more certainty than a stage play. Knolles's History.

I maintain, against the enemies of the stage, that patterns of piety, decently represented, may second the precepts. Dryden.

One Livius Andronicus was the first stage player in Rome. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

Knights, squires, and steeds must enter on the stage. Pope.

3. Any place where any thing is publickly transacted or performed.

When we are born, we cry that we are come
To this great stage of fools. Shakesp. King Lear.

4. [Statio, Lat.] A place in which rest is taken on a journey; as much of a journey as is performed without intermission.

I shall put you in mind where it was you promised to set out, or begin your first stage, and beseech you to go before me as my guide Hammond's Practical Catechism

Our next stage brought us to the mouth of the Tiber. Addison.

From thence compell'd by craft and age,
She makes the head or latest stage Prior

We must not expect that our journey through the several stages of this life should be all smooth and even Atterbury

By opening a passage from Muscovy to China, and marking the several stages, it was a journey of so many days. Baker

Men drop so fast, ere life's mid stage we tread,
Few know so many friends alive as dead Young

5. A single step of gradual process.

The changes and vicissitudes in wars are many, but chiefly in the feats or stages of the war, the weapons, and the manner of the conduct. Bacon's Essays.

This is by some called the first stage of a consumption, but I had rather call it an ill habit preparatory to that distemper. Blackmore

To prepare the soul to be a fit inhabitant of that holy place to which we aspire, is to be brought to perfection by gradual advances through several hard and laborious stages of discipline Rogers

The first stage of healing, or the discharge of matter, is by surgeons called digestion Sharp's Surg.

To STAGE. v. a. [from the noun] To exhibit publickly. Out of use

I love the people,
But do not like to stage me to their eyes
Though it do well, I do not relish well
Their loud applause. Shakesp Meas. for Meas.

The quick comedians
Extemp'rally will stage us, and present
Our Alexandrian revels. Shakesp Ant and Cleop

STA'GECOACH. n. s. [stage and coach] A coach that keeps its stages; a coach that passes and repasses on certain days for the accommodation of passengers.

The story was told me by a priest, as we travelled in a stagecoach. Addison.

When late their miry sides stagecoaches show,
And their stiff horses through the town move slow,
Then let the prudent walker shoes provide Gay

Among slaves who exercised polite arts, none sold so dear as stageplayers or actors Arbuthnot on Coins.

STA'GER. n. s. [from stage.]

1. A player.

You, safe in your stage clothes,
Dare quit, upon your oaths,
The stagers and the stage wrights too. B Jonson

2. One who has long acted on the stage of life; a practitioner; a person of cunning.

I've heard old cunning stagers
Say, fools for argument use wagers. Hudibras

One experienced stager, that had baffled twenty traps and tricks before, discovered the plot L'Estrange.

Some stagers of the wiser sort
Made all these idle wonderments their sport
But he, who heard what ev'ry fool could say,
Would never fix his thought but trim his time away. Dryden

One cries out, these stagers,
Come in good time to make more work for wagers.
Dryden.

Be by a parson cheated!
Had you been cunning stagers,
You might yourselves be treated
By captains and by majors. Swift

STA'GEVIL. n. s. A disease in horses. Dict.

STA'GGARD. n. s. [from stag.] A four year old stag. Ainsworth.

To STA'GGER. v. n. [staggeren, Dut.]

He began to appear sick and giddy, and to stagger, after which he fell down as dead. Boyle

He struck with all his might
Full on the helmet of th' unwary knight,
Deep was the wound, he staggered with the blow
Dryden.

Them revelling the Tentyrites invade,
By giddy heads and staggering legs betray'd. Tate

The immediate forerunners of an apoplexy are a vertigo, staggering, and loss of memory. Arbuth.

2. To faint, to begin to give way.

The enemy staggers if you follow your blow, he falls at your feet, but if you allow him respite, he will recover his strength Addison

3. To hesitate; to fall into doubt; to become less confident or determined.

A man may, if he were fearful, stagger in this attempt. Shakespeare

He staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief, but was strong in faith Romans, iv 20

Three means to fortify belief are experience, reason, and authority: of these the most potent is authority, for belief upon reason, or experience, will stagger Bacon

No heretick desire to spread
Their light opinions like these Epicures,
For so their stagg'ring thoughts are comforted,
And other men's assent their doubt assures Davies

If thou confidently depend on the truth of this, without any doubting or staggering, this will be accepted by God Hammond.

But let it inward sink and drown my mind
Falsehood shall want its triumph I begin
To stagger, but I'll prop myself within Dryden.

To STA'GGER. v a.

1. To make to stagger; to make to reel.

That hand shall burn in never-quenching fire,
That staggers thus my person Shakesp Rich II

2. To shock, to alarm; to make less steady or confident.

Bearing a state of mighty moment in't
Shakesp Henry VIII

Whosoever will read the story of this war, will find himself much staggered, and put to a kind of riddle. Howel.

When a prince fails in honour and justice, 'tis enough to stagger his people in their allegiance
L'Estrange

The shells being lodged with the belemnites, selenites, and other like natural fossils, it was enough to stagger a spectator, and make him ready to entertain a belief that these were so too Woodward.

STA'GGERS. n s [from the verb]

1. A kind of horse apoplexy.

His horse past cure of the fives, stark spoil'd with the staggers. Shakesp

2. Madness, wild conduct, irregular behaviour. Out of use.

I will throw thee from my care for ever
Into the staggers, and the careless lapse
Of youth and ignorance. Shakespeare

STA'GNANCY. n. s [from stagnant] The state of being without motion or ventilation.

STAGNANT. adj [stagnans, Lat] Motionless, still; not agitated; not flowing, not running.

What does the flood from putrefaction keep
Should it be stagnant in its ample seat,
The sun would through it spread destructive heat.
Blackmore

'Twas owing to this hurry and action of the water, that the sand now was cast into layers, and not to a regular settlement, from a water quiet and stagnant Woodward

Immur'd and buried in perpetual sloth,
That gloomy slumber of the stagnant soul Irene

To STA'GNATE. v. n. [stagnum, Lat.] To lie motionless; to have no course or stream.

The water which now arises must have all stagnated at the surface, and could never possibly have been refunded forth upon the earth, had not the strata been thus raised up Woodward.

The aliment moving through the capillary tubes stagnates, and unites itself to the vessel through which it flows Arbuthnot.

Where creeping waters ooze,
Where marshes stagnate. Thomson.

STAGNA'TION. n. s [from stagnate.] Stop of course; cessation of motion. It is often applied figuratively to moral or civil images.

As the Alps surround Geneva on all sides, they form a vast bason, where there would be a constant stagnation of vapours, did not the north wind scatter them from time to time Addison

To what great ends subservient is the wind!
Behold, where'er this active vapour flies,
It drives the clouds, and agitates the skies:
This from stagnation and corruption saves
Th' aerial ocean's ever-rolling waves. Blackmore

STAID. part. adj. [from stay.] Sober; grave, regular, composed; not wild, not volatile.

Put thyself
Into a 'haviour of less fear, ere wildness
Vanish my staider senses Shakesp Cymbeline

This seems to our weaker view,
O'erlaid with black, staid wisdom's hue Milton

I should not be a persuader to them of studying much in the spring, after three years that they have well laid their grounds, but to ride out, with prudent and staid guides, to all the quarters of the land Milton on Education.

I am the more at ease in sir Roger's family, because it consists of sober and staid persons Addis.

STA'IDNESS n. s. [from staid.] Sobriety; gravity; regularity; contrariety to wildness.

The boiling blood of youth, fiercely agitating the fluid air, hinders that serenity and fixed staidness which is necessary to so severe an intenseness Glanville's Sceptis

If sometimes he appears too gay, yet a secret gracefulness of youth accompanies his writings, though the staidness and sobriety of age be wanting Dryden's Preface to Ovid.

To STAIN v. a. [ystaenio, Welsh, from ys and taenu.

Rhag Gwyar or Gnawd,
Afar ystaenawd.
Taliessyn, an old British poet.]

1 To blot, to spot, to maculate.

Lend me a looking glass,
If that her breath will mist or stain the stone,
Why then she lives Sakespeare's King Lear

From the gash a stream
His armour stain'd, erewhile so bright Milton

Embrace again, my sons be foes no more,
Nor stain your country with your children's gore.
Dryden.

2 To dye.

3. To disgrace, to spot with guilt or infamy

Of honour void, of innocence, of faith, of purity,
Our wonted ornaments now soil'd and stain'd
Milton.

STAIN n s [from the verb]

1. Blot, spot, discoloration.

We nowhere meet with a more pleasing show than what appears in the heavens at the rising and setting of the sun, which is wholly made up of those different stains of light that shew themselves in clouds of a different situation. Addison.

Swift trouts, diversified with crimson stains:
And pikes, the tyrants of the wat'ry plains. Pope.

2. Taint of guilt or infamy.

Nor death itself can wholly wash their stains,
But long contracted filth ev'n in the soul remains:
The reliques of inveterate vice they wear,
And spots of sin Dryden's Æneid.

To solemn actions of royalty and justice, their suitable ornaments are a beauty: are they only in religion a stain? Hooker.

Our opinion, concerning the force and virtue which such places have, is, I trust, without any blemish or stain of heresy. Hooker.

Then heav'n and earth, renew'd, shall be made pure
To sanctity, that shall receive no stain. Milton.

Ulysses bids his friends to cast lots, for if he had made the choice himself, they whom he had rejected might have judged it a stain upon them for want of merit. Broome.

3. Cause of reproach; shame.

Hereby I will lead her that is the praise, and yet the stain, of all womankind. Sidney.

STAI'NER. n. s. [from stain.] One who stains; one who blots; one who dyes; a dyer.

STA'INLESS. adj. [from stain.]

1. Free from blots or spots. Not in use.

The phenix wings are not so rare
For faultless length and stainless hue. Sidney.

2. Free from sin or reproach

I cannot love him;
Yet I suppose him virtuous, know him noble,
Of great estate, of fresh and stainless youth. Shak.

STAIR. n. s. [ꝑtæzep, Sax. steghe, Dut.] Steps by which we rise in ascent from the lower part of a building to the upper. Stair was anciently used for the whole order of steps; but stair now, if it be used at all, signifies, as in Milton, only one flight of steps.

A good builder to a high tower will not make his stair upright, but winding almost the full compass about, that the steepness be the more insensible Sidney.

How many cowards, whose hearts are all as false
As stairs of sand, wear yet upon their chins
The beards of Hercules and frowning Mars! Shak.

Slaver with lips as common as the stairs
That mount the capitol Shakesp.

I would have one only goodly room above stairs, of some forty foot high. Bacon's Essays.

Sir James Tirrel repairing to the Tower by night, attended by two servants, stood at the stair-foot, and sent these two villains to execute the murder Bacon.

The stairs were such as whereon Jacob saw
Angels ascending and descending. Milt. Par. Lost.

Satan now on the lower stair,
That scal'd by steps of gold to heaven gate,
Looks down with wonder at the sudden view
Of all this world. Milton's Paradise Lost

Trembling he springs,
As terror had increas'd his feet with wings;
Nor staid for stairs, but down the depth he threw
His body, on his back the door he drew. Dryden.

STA'IRCASE n. s. [stair and case.] The part of a fabrick that contains the stairs.

To make a complete staircase is a curious piece of architecture. Wotton.

I cannot forbear mentioning a staircase, where the easiness of the ascent, the disposition of the lights, and the convenient landing, are admirably contrived. Addison on Italy.

STAKE. n. s. [ꝑtæca, Sax. staeck, Dut. estaca, Span.]

1. A post or strong stick fixed in the ground.

The more I shaked the stake which he had planted in the ground of my heart, the deeper still it sunk into it. Sidney.

His credit in the world might stand the poor town in great stead, as hitherto their ministers foreign estimation hath been the best stake in their hedge. Hooker.

He wanted pikes to set before his archers; Instead whereof sharp stakes, pluck'd out of hedges, They pitched in the ground. Shakesp. Henry VI.

In France the grapes that make the wine grow upon low vines bound to small stakes, and the raised vines in arbors make but verjuice Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Or sharpen stakes, or head the forks, or twine The sallow twigs to tie the straggling vine. Dryden.

Her riddle, and him, who solv'd it not, devour'
That once found out and solv'd, for grief and spig
Cast herself headlong from th' Ismenian steep. Mil

As high turrets for their airy steep
Require foundations in proportion deep;
And lofty cedars as far upwards shoot
As to the nether heavens they drive the root;
So low did her secure foundation lie, e
She was not humble, but humility. Dryde

Instructs the beast to know his native forte,
To take the bit between his teeth, and fly
To the next headlong steep of anarchy. Dryde

We had on each side naked rocks and mountains, broken into a thousand irregular steeps and precipices. Addison.

Leaning o'er the rails, he musing stood,
And view'd below the black canal of mud,
Where common shores a lulling murmur keep,
Whose torrents rush from Holborn's fatal steep.
Gay

I am in blood
Stept in so far, that should I wade no more,
Returning were as tedious as go o'er. Shak. Macb.

5. To come as it were by chance.

The old poets step in to the assistance of the medalist. Addison.

6. To take a short walk.

See where he comes, so, please you, step aside
I'll know his grievance. Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

My brothers, when they saw me wearied out,
Stepp'd, as they said, to the next thicket side
To bring me berries. Milton

When your master wants a servant who happens to be abroad, answer, that he had but that minute stept out. Swift

7. To walk gravely, slowly, or resolutely.

Pyrrhus, the most ancient of all the bashaws, steps forth, and, appealing unto his mercies, earnestly requested him to spare his life. Knolles's History of the Turks.

When you stepp'd forth, how did the monster rage,
In scorn of your soft looks and tender age! Cowl.

Home the swain retreats,
His flock before him stepping to the fold. Thomson's Summer.

STEP. n. s. [ꝑtæp, Sax. stap, Dut.]

1. Progression by one removal of the foot.

Thou sound and firm-set earth,
Hear not my steps, which way they walk. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Ling'ring perdition, worse than any death
Can be at once, shall step by step attend
You and your ways Shakesp. Tempest.

Who was the first to explore th' untrodden path,
When life was hazarded in every step? Addis. Cato

2. One remove in climbing; hold for the foot; a stair.

While Solyman lay at Buda, seven bloody heads of bishops slain in battle were set in order upon a wooden step. Knolles.

The breadth of every single step or stair should be never less than one foot, nor more than eighteen inches. Wotton.

Those heights where William's virtue might have staid,
And on the subject world look'd safely down,
By Marlbro' pass'd, the props and steps were made
Sublimer yet to raise his queen's renown Prior.

It was a saying among the ancients, Truth lies in a well, and to carry on this metaphor, we may justly say, that logick does supply us with steps, whereby we may go down to reach the water Watts.

3. Quantity of space passed or measured by one removal of the foot.

The gradus, a Roman measure, may be translated a step, or the half of a passus or pace. Arbuthnot on Coins.

4. A small length; a small space.

There is but a step between me and death
1 Sam. xx. 3.

5. [In the plural.] Walk; passage.

Conduct my steps to find the fatal tree
In this deep forest. Dryden's Æneid.

6. Gradation; degree.

The same sin for substance hath sundry steps and degrees, in respect whereof one man becometh a more heinous offender than another Perkins.

7. Progression; act of advancing.

To derive two or three general principles of motion from phænomena, and afterwards to tell us how the properties and actions of all corporeal things follow from those manifest principles, would be a very great step in philosophy, though the causes of those principles were not yet discovered. Newt.

One injury is best defended by a second, and this by a third by these steps the old masters of the palace in France became masters of the kingdom, and by these steps a general during pleasure might have grown into a general for life, and a general for life into a king. Swift.

The querist must not proceed too swiftly towards the determination of his point, that he may with more ease draw the learner to those principles step by step, from whence the final conclusion will arise. Watts.

8. Footstep; print of the foot.

From hence Astræa took her flight, and here
The prints of her departing steps appear. Dry. Virg.

9. Gait; manner of walking.

Sudden from the golden throne
With a submissive step I hasted down,
The glowing garland from my hair I took,
Love in my heart, obedience in my look. Prior.

10. Action; instance of conduct.

The reputation of a man depends upon the first steps he makes in the world. Pope.

STEP, in composition, signifies one who is related only by marriage. [ꝑteop, Sax. from ꝑteapan to deprive or make an orphan; for the Saxons not only said a step-mother, but a step-daughter or step-son; to which it indeed, according to this etymology, more properly belongs: but as it is now seldom applied but to the mother, it seems to mean, in the mind of those who use it, a woman who has stepped into the vacant place of the true mother.]

How should their minds chase but misdoubt, lest this discipline, which always you match with divine doctrine as her natural and true sister, be found unto all kinds of knowledge a step-mother? Hooker.

His wanton step-dame loved him the more;
But when she saw her offer'd sweets refuse,
Her love she turn'd to hate. Spenser.

You shall not find me, daughter,
After the slander of most step-mothers,
Ill-eyed unto you. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

A father cruel, and a step-dame false. Shakesp.

Cato the elder being aged, buried his wife, and married a young woman his son came to him, and said, Sir, what have I offended, that you have brought a step-mother into your house? The old man answered, Nay, quite the contrary, son; thou pleasest me so well, as I would be glad to have more such. Bacon.

The name of stepdame, your practis'd art,
By which you have estrang'd my father's heart,
All you have done against me, or design,
Shows your aversion, but begets not mine.
Dryden's Aurengz.

A step-dame too I have, a cursed she,
Who rules my hen-peck'd sire, and orders me. Dryden.

Any body would have guessed Miss to have been bred up under the influence of a cruel step-dame and John to be the fondling of a tender mother. Arbuth. Hist. of John Bull.

STE'PPINGSTONE. n. s. [step and stone.] Stone laid to catch the foot and save it from wet or dirt.

Like stepping-stones to save a stride,
In streets where kennels are too wide Swift.

STERCORA'CEOUS. adj. [stercoraceus, Lat.] Belonging to dung; partaking of the nature of dung.

Green juicy vegetables, in a heap together, acquire a heat equal to that of a human body: then a putrid stercoraceous taste and odour, in taste resembling putrid flesh, and in smell human faeces. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

STERCORA'TION. n. s. [from stercoro, Lat.] The act of dunging; the act of manuring with dung.

The barren, touched in this holy chase,
Shake off their steril curse. Shakesp. Julius Cæsar

The sea marge steril, and rocky hard
Shakesp. Tempest.

In very steril years, corn sown will grow to another kind. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

To separate seeds, put them in water; such as are corrupted and steril swim. Brown's Vulg. Err.

She is grown steril and barren, and her births of animals are now very inconsiderable. More against Atheism.

When the vegetative stratum was once washed off by rains, the hills would have become barren, the strata below yielding only more sterile and mineral matter, such as was inept for the formation of vegetables. Woodward.

STERI'LITY. n. s. [sterilité, Fr. sterilitas, from sterilis, Lat.] Barrenness; want of fecundity; unfruitfulness.

Spain is thin sown of people, by reason of the sterility of the soil, and because their natives are exhausted by so many employments in such vast territories. Bacon's War with Spain.

An eternal sterility must have possessed the world, where all things had been fastened everlastingly, with the adamantine chains of specifick gravity, if the Almighty had not said, Let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yielding seed, and the fruit-tree yielding fruit. Bentley's Sermons

He had more frequent occasion for repetition than any poet; yet one cannot ascribe this to any sterility of expression, but to the genius of his times, which delighted in these reiterated verses Pope's Essay on Homer.

To STE'RILIZE. v. a. [from steril.] To make barren; to deprive of fecundity, or the power of production.

May we not as well suppose the sterilising the earth was suspended for some time, till the deluge became the executioner of it? Woodw. Nat Hist.

Go! sterilize the fertile with thy rage. Savage.

STE'RLING. adj. [Of this word many derivations have been offered; the most probable of which is that offered by Camden, who derives it from the Easterlings, who were employed as coiners.]

1. An epithet by which genuine English money is discriminated.

The king's treasure, that he left at his death, amounted unto eighteen hundred thousand pounds sterling Bacon

Several of them would rather chuse to count out a sum in sesterces than in pounds sterling Addison.

2. Genuine; having passed the test.

There is not one single witty phrase in this collection, which hath not received the stamp and approbation of one hundred years he may therefore be secure to find them all genuine, sterling, and authentick. Swift's Polite Conversation.

STE'RLING. n. s. [sterlingum, low Lat. from the adjective.]

1. English coin; money.

This visionary various projects tries,
And knows that to be rich is to be wise
By useful observation he can tell
The sacred charms that in true sterling dwell;
How gold makes a patrician of a slave,
A dwarf an Atlas, a Therslites brave Garth.

Great name! which in our rolls recorded stands,
Leads honours, and protects the learned bands,
Accept this offering to thy bounty due,
And Roman wealth in English sterling view.
C. Arbuthnot.

2. Standard rate.

STERN. adj. [ꝑeyn, Sax.]

1. Severe of countenance; truculent of aspect.

Why look you still so stern and tragical? Shakesp. Henry VI.

I would outstare the sternest eyes that look,
Outbrave the heart most daring on the earth,
Pluck the young sucking cubs from the she-bear,
Yes, mock the lion when he roars for prey,
To win thee, lady. Shakesp. Merch. of Venice.

It shall not be amiss here to present the stern but lively countenance of this so famous a man Knolles's History of the Turks.

Gods and men
Fear'd her stern frown, and she was queen o' th' woods. Milton.

The judge supreme soon cast a stedfast eye,
Stern, yet attemper'd with benignity. Harte.

2. Severe of manners; harsh; unrelenting; cruel.

Women are soft, mild, pitiful, and flexible;
Thou, stern, obdurate, flinty, rough, remorseless. Shakesp.

The common executioner,
Whose heart th' accustom'd sight of death makes hard,
Falls not the ax upon the humbled neck,
But first begs pardon will you sterner be
Than he that deals and lives by bloody drops? Shakesp

Did this in Cæsar seem ambitious?
When that the poor have cried, Cæsar hath wept,
Ambition should be made of sterner stuff. Shakesp Julius Cæsar

Then shall the war, and stern debate, and strife
Immortal be the business of my life,
And in thy fame, the dusty spoils among,
High on the burnish'd roof my banner should be hung Dryden.

How stern as tutors, and as uncles hard,
We lash the pupil, and defraud the ward. Dryden's Persius.

3. Hard; afflictive.

If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time,
Thou shouldst have said, Go, porter, turn the key,
All cruels else subscrib'd Shakesp King Lear

Mischiefe stood,
And with his stern steele drew in streames the blood. Chapman

STERN. n. s. [ꝑeoꝛn, Sax. of the same original with steer.]

1. The hind part of the ship where the rudder is placed.

Let a barbarous Indian, who had never seen a ship, view the separate and disjointed parts, as the prow and stern, the ribs, masts, ropes, and shrouds, he would form but a very lame idea of it. Watts on the Mind

They turn their heads to sea, their sterns to land. Dryden.

STEW. n. s. [estuve, Fr. stufa, Ital. estufa, Span.]

1. A bagnio; a hot-house.

As burning Ætna from his boiling stew
Doth belch out flames, and rocks in pieces broke,
And ragged ribs of mountains molten new,
Enwrapt in coal-black clouds and filthy smoke, Spenser

The Lydians were inhibited by Cyrus to use any armour, and give themselves to baths and stews Abbot.

2. A brothel; a house of prostitution. [This signification is by some imputed to this, that there were licensed brothels near the stews or fishponds in Southwark; but probably stew, like bagnio, took a bad signification from bad use. It may be doubted whether it has any singular. South uses it in a plural termination with a singular sense. Shakespeare makes it singular.]

There be that hate harlots, and never were at the stews, that abhor falsehood, and never brake promise. Ascham

I have seen corruption boil and bubble,
Till it o'er-run the stew Shakesp

With them there are no stews, no dissolute houses, no curtesans. Bacon's New Atalantis.

Her, though sev'n years she in the stews had laid
A nunnery durst receive and think a maid,
And, though in childbirth's labour she did lie,
Midwives would swear t'were but a tympany Donne.

What mod'rate fop would rake the park or stews,
Who among troops of faultless nymphs can choose? Roscommon.

Making his own house a stews, a bordel, and a school of lewdness, to mattil the rudiments of vice into the unwary flexible years of his poor children. South.

STE'WARD. n. s. [ꝑꝛuꝑaꝛb, Sax.]

1 One who manages the affairs of another.

There sat yclad in red
Down to the ground a comely personage,
That in his hand a white rod managed;
He steward was, high diet, ripe of age,
And in demeanour sober, and in council sage.
Spenser

Whilst I have gold, I'll be his steward still Shakesp Timon

Take on you the charge
And kingly government of this your land,
Not as protector, steward, substitute,
Or lowly factor for another's gain Shak. Rich III

How is it that I hear this of thee? Give an account of thy stewardship; for thou mayest be no longer steward. Luke, xvi

Improve all those talents the providence of God hath intrusted us with, because we are but stewards, and must give an account of them Nelson.

When a steward defrauds his lord, he must connive at the rest of the servants while they are following the same practice Swift

What can be a greater honour than to be chosen one of the stewards and dispensers of God's bounty to mankind? What can give a generous spirit more complacency, than to consider that great numbers owe to him, under God, their subsistence, and the good conduct of their lives? Swift.

Just steward of the bounty he receiv'd,
And dying poorer than the poor reliev'd. Harte.

2. An officer of state.

The duke of Suffolk is the first, and claims
To be high steward. Shakesp

If a chair be defined a seat for a single person, with a back belonging to it, then a stool is a seat for a single person without a back. Watts's Logick.
Thou fearful fool,
Why takest not of the same fruit of gold?
Ne sittest down on that same silver stool,
To rest thy weary person in the shadow cold? Spens.
Now which were wise, and which were fools?
Poor Alma sits between two stools;
The more she reads, the more perplext. Prior.

2. Evacuation by purgative medicines.
There be medicines that move stools, and not urine, some other urine, and not stools those that purge by stool, are such as enter not at all, or little, into the mesentery veins, but either at the first are not digestible by the stomach, and therefore move immediately downwards to the guts, or else are afterwards rejected by the mesentery veins, and so turn likewise downwards to the guts
Bacon's Natural History.
The peristaltick motion, or repeated changes of contradiction and dilatation, is not in the lower guts, else one would have a continual needing of going to stool. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. Stool of Repentance, or Cutty Stool, in the kirks of Scotland, is somewhat analogous to the pillory. It is elevated above the congregation. In some places there may be a seat in it; but it is generally without, and the person stands therein, who has been guilty of fornication, for three Sundays, in the forenoon; and after sermon is called upon by name and surname, the beadle or kirk-officer bringing the offender, if refractory, forwards to his post; and then the preacher proceeds to admonition. Here too are set to public view adulterers, only these are habited in a coarse canvass, analogous to a hairy or monastick vest, with a hood to it, which they call the sack, or sackcloth; and that every Sunday throughout a year, or longer.
Unequal and unreasonable judgments of things brings many a great man to the stool of repentance

The proud Ducessa, full of wrathful spight
And fierce disdain to be affronted so,
Inforc'd her purple beast with all her might,
That stop out of the way to overthrow Spenser.

On indeed they went but O! not far,
A fatal stop travers'd their headlong course,
Daniel.

Blessed be that God who cast rubs, stops, and hindrances in my way, when I was attempting the commission of such a sin. South.

So melancholy a prospect should inspire us with zeal to oppose some stop to the rising torrent, and check this overflowing of ungodliness. Rogers.

8. Instrument by which the sounds of wind-musick are regulated.

You would play upon me, you would seem to know my stops, you would pluck out the heart of my mystery. Shakesp.

Blest are those,
Whose blood and judgment are so well commingled
That they are not a pipe for fortune's finger
To sound what stop she please. Shakesp. Hamlet.

The harp
Had work, and rested not, the solemn pipe,
And dulcimer, all organs of sweet stop. Milton

The sound
Of instruments, that made melodious chime,
Was heard of harp and organ, and who mov'd
Their stops, and chords, was seen, his volant touch
Instinct through all proportion, low and high,
Fled, and pursued transverse the resonant fugue
Milton.

A variety of strings may be observed on their harps, and of stops on their tibiæ, which shews the little foundation that such writers have gone upon, who, from a short passage in a classick author, have determined the precise shape of the ancient musical instruments, with the exact number of their pipes, strings, and stops. Addison on Italy.

9. Regulation of musical chords by the fingers.

The farther a string is strained, the less superstraining goeth to a note, for it requireth good winding of a string before it will make any note at all and in the stops of lutes, the higher they go, the less distance is between the frets. Bacon.

10. The act of applying the stops in musick.

Th' organ-sound a time survives the stop,
Before it doth the dying note give up.
Daniel's Civil War.

11. A point in writing, by which sentences are distinguished.

Even the iron-pointed pen,
That notes the tragick dooms of men,
Wet with tears still'd from the eyes
Of the flinty destinies,
Would have learn'd a softer style,
And have been asham'd to spoil
His life's sweet story by the haste
Of a cruel stop ill-plac'd Crashaw.

STO'PCOCK. n. s. [stop and cock.] A pipe made to let out liquor, stopped by a turning cock.

No man could spit from him without it, but would drivel like some paralytick or fool; the tongue being as a stopcock to the air, till upon its removal the spittle is driven away Grew's Cosmol.

STO'PGAP. n. s. [from stop and gap.] Something substituted; a temporary expedient.

STO'PPAGE. n. s. [from stop.] The act of stopping; the state of being stopped.

STORE. n s. [stór, in old Swedish and Runick, is much, and is prefixed to other words to intend their signification; stor, Dan. stoor, Island. is great. The Teutonick dialects nearer to English seem not to have retained this word.]

1. Large number; large quantity; plenty

The ships are fraught with store of victuals, and good quantity of treasure Bacon.

None yet, but store hereafter from the earth
Up hither like aerial vapours flew,
Of all things transitory and vain, when sin
With vanity had filled the works of men Milton

Jove, grant me length of life, and years good store
Heap on my bended back Dryden's Juvenal

2. A stock accumulated; a supply hoarded

We liv'd supine amidst our flowing store,
We slept securely, and we dreamt of more. Dryd

Divine Cecilia came,
Inventress of the vocal fame
The sweet enthusiast from her sacred store
Enlarg'd the former narrow bounds,
And added length to solemn sounds Dryden.

Thee, goddess, thee, Britannia's isle adores
How has she oft exhausted all her stores!
How oft in fields of death thy presence sought,
Nor thinks the mighty prize too dearly bought! Addison.

Their minds are richly fraught
With philosophick stores Thomson.

3. The state of being accumulated; hoard.

Is not this laid up in store with me, and sealed up among my treasures? Deut. xxxii. 34.

Her mind with thousand virtues stor'd,
Her pow'r with boundless joy confest,
Her person only not ador'd Prior

2. To stock against a future time.

Some were of opinion that it were best to stay where they were, until more aid and store of victuals were come, but others said the enemy were but barely stored with victuals, and therefore could not long hold out. Knolles's History.

One having stored a pond of four acres with carps, tench, and other fish, and only put in two small pikes, at seven years end, upon the draught, not one fish was left, but the two pikes grown to an excessive bigness Hale

The mind reflects on its own operations about the ideas got by sensation, and thereby stores itself with a new set of ideas, which I call ideas of reflection. Locke

To store the vessel let the care be mine
With water from the rocks, and rosy wine,
And life-sustaining bread Pope's Odyssey

3. To lay up; to hoard

Let the main part of the corn be a common stock, laid in and stored up, and then delivered out in proportion. Bacon

STO'REHOUSE. n. s. [store and house]

1 Magazine; treasury, place in which things are hoarded and reposited against a time of use.

By us it is willingly confessed, that the scripture of God is a storehouse abounding with inestimable treasures of wisdom and knowledge, in many kinds over and above things in this kind barely necessary Hooker

Suffer us to famish, and their storehouses cramm'd with grain! Shakesp. Coriolanus

Joseph opened all the storehouses, and sold unto the Egyptians Gen xli 56

To these high pow'rs a storehouse doth pertain,
Where they all arts and gen'ral reasons lay,
Which in the soul, ev'n after death, remain,
And no Lethean flood can wash away Davies

My heart hath been a storehouse long of things
And sayings laid up, portending strange events Milton

The image of God was resplendant in man's practical understanding, that storehouse of the soul, in which are treasured up the rules of action and the seeds of morality South

As many different sounds as can be made by single articulations, so many letters there are in the storehouse of nature. Holder

Would tile, an epigram would thatch. Swift

To STORY. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To tell in history; to relate.

How worthy he is, I will leave to appear hereafter, rather than story him in his own hearing Shakesp Cymbeline

'Tis not vain or fabulous
What the sage poets taught by th' heav'nly muse,
Stored of old in high immortal verse,
Of dire chimeras and enchanted isles,
And rifted rocks whose entrance leads to hell Milt

It is stored of the brasen Colossus, in the island of Rhodes, that it was seventy cubits high, the thumbs of it being so big, that no man could grasp one of them with both his arms. Wilkins.

Recite them, nor in erring pity fear
To wound with stories griefs the filial ear Pope.

2. To range one under another.

Because all the parts of an undisturbed fluid are of equal gravity, or gradually placed or stored according to the difference of it, any concretion that can be supposed to be naturally and mechanically made in such a fluid, must have a like structure of its several parts, that is, either be all over of a similar gravity, or have the more ponderous parts nearer to its basis. Bentley's Sermons

STO'RYTELLER. n. s. [story and tell.] One who relates tales in conversation; an historian, in contempt.

In such a satyr all would seek a share,
And every fool will fancy he is there,
Old storytellers too must pine and die,
To see their antiquated wit laid by,
Like her who miss'd her name in a lampoon,
And griev'd to find herself decay'd so soon Dryd

Company will be no longer pestered with dull, dry, tedious storytellers Swift's Polite Conversation

STOVE n. s [stoo, Island. a fire-place, ꝼtopa, Sax. estuve, Fr stove, Dut.]

1. A hot-house; a place artificially made warm.

Fishermen who make holes in the ice, to dip up such fish with their nets as resort thither for breathing, light on swallows congealed in clods of a slimy substance, and carrying them home to their stoves, the warmth recovereth them to life and flight. Carew's Survey of Cornwall

Stoves, which could autumn of cold winter make,
Fountains in autumn to bring winter back
Beaum. Psyche

The heat which arises out of the lesser spiracles brings forth nitre and sulphur, some of which it affixes to the tops and sides of the grottos, which are usually so hot as to serve for natural stoves or sweating-vaults Woodward

The most proper place for unction is a stove Wiseman.

2. A place in which fire is made, and by which heat is communicated

If the season prove exceeding piercing, in your great house kindle some charcoals, and when they have done smoaking, put them into a hole sunk a little into the floor, about the middle of it. This is the safest stove Evelyn

To STOVE. v a [from the noun.] To keep warm in a house artificialy heated.

For December, January, and the latter part of November, take such things as are green all winter, orange trees, lemon trees, and myrtles, if they be stoved, and sweet marjoram warm set. Bacon

2 For stunned. Spenser.

STOUND n s. [from the verb]

1. Sorrow; grief; mishap. Out of use. The Scots retain it.

Begin and end the bitter baleful stound,
If less than that I fear Spenser

The fox his copesmate found,
To whom complaining his unhappy stound,
He with him far'd some better chance to find Spenser

2. Astonishment, amazement.

Thus we stood, as in a stound,
And wet with tears, like dew, the ground Gay

3. Hour; time, season.

STOUR. n. s. [stur, Runick, a battle, ꝼtopian, Sax. to disturb.] Assault, incursion; tumult. Obsolete.

And he that harrow'd hell with heavy stour,
The faulty souls from thence brought to his heav'nly bow'r. Spenser's Fairy Queen

Love, that long since has to thy mighty powre
Per force subdued my poor captivated heart,
And raging now therein with restless stowre,
Dost tyrannize in every weaker part Spenser

The giant struck so mainly merciless,
That could have overthrown a stonny tow'r,
And, were not heav'nly grace him did bless,
He had been pouldered all as thin as flower,
But he was weary of that deadly stowre Spenser

STOUT. adj. [stout, Dut stolz proud, Germ. stautan, Gothick, is to strike.]

1. Strong, lusty, valiant.

When I was young,
I do remember how my father said,
A stouter champion never handled sword Shakesp Henry VI

Some captain of the land or fleet,
Stout of his hands, but of a soldier's wit,
Cries, I have sense to serve my turn, in store,
And he 's a rascal who pretends to more Dryden

2. Brave, bold, intrepid.

The stout-hearted are spoiled Psalm lxxvi. 5

He lost the character of a bold, stout, and magnanimous man, which he had been long reputed to be Clarendon

The lords all stand,
To clear their cause, most resolutely stout. Daniel.

There virtue and stout honour pass'd the guard
Those only friends that could not be debarr'd Bathurst.

4. Strong; firm.

The stoutest vessel to the storm gave way,
And suck'd through loosen'd planks the rushing sea. Dryden

STOUT. n. s. A cant name for strong beer

Should but his muse descending drop
A slice of bread and mutton chop,
Or kindly, when his credit's out,
Surprise him with a pint of stout,
Exalted in his mighty mind,
He flies and leaves the stars behind Swift

STOU'TLY. adv. [from stout.] Lustily; boldly; obstinately.

STOU'TNESS n. s. [from stout.]

1. Strength; valour.

2 Boldness; fortitude.

His bashfulness in youth was the very true sign of his virtue and stoutness after Ascham's Schoolm.

3. Obstinacy; stubbornness.

Come all to ruin, let
Thy mother rather feel thy pride, than fear
Thy dangerous stoutness for I mock at death
With as stout heart as thou Shakesp. Coriolanus.

To STOW. v. a. [ꝼtop, Sax. stoc, old Frisick, a place, stowen, Dut. to lay up.] To lay up; to reposit in order; to lay in the proper place.

Foul thief! where hast thou stow'd my daughter? Shakesp.

I' th' holsters of the saddle-bow
Two aged pistols he did stow Hudibras.

Some stow their oars, or stop the leaky sides. Dryden.

All the patriots were beheaded, stowed in dungeons, or condemned to work in the mines Addis.

The goddess shov'd the vessel from the shores,
And stow'd within its womb the naval stores Pope.

So gives th' advent'rous merchant, when he throws
All his long-toil'd-for treasure his ship stows
Into the angry main Carew.

STO'WAGE. n. s. [from stow]

1. Room for laying up.

In every vessel is stowage for immense treasures, when the cargo is pure bullion, or merchandise of as great a value Addison.

2. The state of being laid up.

'Tis plate of rare device, and jewels
Of rich and exquisite form, their value's great;
And I am something curious, being strange,
To have them in safe stowage Shakesp. Cymbeline.

3. Money paid for stowing of goods.

STOWE, STOE, whether singly or jointly, are the same with the Sax. ꝼtop a place. Gibson's Camden.

STRA'BISM. n. s. [strabisme, Fr. strabismus, Lat] A squinting; act of looking asquint.

To STRA'DDLE. v. n. [supposed to come from straddle or stride.] To stand or walk with the feet removed far from each other to the right and left, to part the legs wide.

Let the man survey himself, divested of artificial charms, and he will find himself a forked straddling animal, with bandy legs. Arbuthnot and Pope

To STRA'GGLE. v. a. [Of this word no etymology is known: it is probably a frequentative of stray, from stravviare, Ital. of extra viam, Lat.]

1. To wander without any certain direction; to rove; to ramble.

But stay, like one that thinks to bring his friend
A mile or two, and sees the journey's end,
I straggle on too far. Suckling.

A wolf spied out a straggling kid, and pursued him. L'Estrange.

Children, even when they endeavour their utmost, cannot keep their minds from straggling. Locke.

2. To wander dispersedly.

He likewise enriched poor straggling soldiers with great quantity. Shakesp. Timon.

They found in Burford some of the straggling soldiers, who out of weariness stayed behind. Clarendon.

Form straggling mountaineers, for public good,
To rank in tribes, and quit the savage wood,
Houses to build, and them contiguous make,
For cheerful neighbourhood and safety's sake. Tate.

3. To exuberate, to shoot too far.

Were they content to prune the lavish vine
Of straggling branches, and improve the wine.

Trim off the small superfluous branches on each side of the hedge, that straggle too far out. Mortimer's Husbandry

4. To be dispersed; to be apart from any main body; to stand single.

Having passed the Syrens, they came between Scylla and Charybdis, and the straggling rocks, which seemed to cast out great store of flames and smoke. Raleigh.

Wide was his parish, not contracted close
In streets, but here and there a straggling house,
Yet still he was at hand. Dryden.

STRA'GGLER. n. s. [from straggle.]

1. A wanderer; a rover; one who forsakes his company; one who rambles without any settled direction.

The last should keep the countries from passage of stragglers from those parts, whence they use to come forth, and oftentimes use to work much mischief. Spenser's Ireland.

Let's whip these stragglers o'er the seas again,
Lash hence these over-weening rags of France,
These famish'd beggars. Shakesp Rich III

Bottles missing are supposed to be half stolen by stragglers, and the other half broken. Swift.

2. Any thing that pushes beyond the rest, or stands single.

Let thy hand supply the pruning knife,
And crop luxuriant stragglers, nor be loth
To strip the branches of their leafy growth Dryd.
His pruning hook corrects the vines,
And the loose stragglers to their ranks confines.
Pope.

STRAIGHT. adj. [strack, old Dut. It is well observed by Ainsworth, that for not crooked we ought to write straight, and for narrow, strait; but for streight, which is sometimes found, there is no good authority.]

1. Not crooked; right.

Beauty made barren the swell'd boast
Of him that best could speak, feature, laming
The shrine of Venus, or straight-pight Minerva.
Shakesp

A hunter's horn and cornet is oblique, yet they have likewise straight horns, which, if they be of the same bore with the oblique, differ little in sound, save that the straight require somewhat a stronger blast. Bacon's Nat Hist

There are many several sorts of crooked lines, but there is one only which is straight. Dryden.

Water and air the varied form confound,
The straight looks crooked, and the square grows round. Prior.

When I see a strait staff appear crooked while half under the water, the water gives me a false notion. Watts's Logick

2. Narrow; close. This should properly be strait. [estroit, Fr. See STRAIT.]

Queen Elizabeth used to say of her instructions to great officers, that they were like to garments, strait at the first putting on, but did by and by wear loose enough. Bacon.

3. Tense; tight. Of this sense it is doubtful whether it belongs to strait, close, narrow; or to straight, not crooked. Pull the cord straight, may mean, draw it till it has no flexure; tie it strait about you, may mean, draw it into a narrower compass. This ambiguity has perhaps confounded the orthography.

STRAIGHT. adv. [strax, Dan. strack, Dut.] Immediately; directly. This sense is naturally derived from the adjective, as a straight line is the shortest line between two points.

If the devil come and roar for them,
I will not send them. I will after straight,
And tell him so Shakesp Henry IV

Those stinks which the nostrils straight abhor and expel, are not the most pernicious
Bacon's Nat Hist

With chalk I first describe a circle here,
Where the ætherial spirits must appear
Come in, come in, for here they will be strait
Around, around the place I fumigate. Dryden

I know thy generous temper well,
Fling but the appearance of dishonour on it,
It straight takes fire, and mounts into a blaze
Addison.

To* STRAI'GHTEN. v. n. [from straight.]

1. To make not crooked; to make straight.

A crooked stick is not straightened, except it be as far bent on the clean contrary side Hooker

Of ourselves being so apt to err, the only way which we have to straighten our path is, by following the rule of his will, whose footsteps naturally are right. Hooker.

2. To make tense; to tighten.

STRAI'GHTLY. adv. [from straight.]

1. In a right line; not crookedly.

2. Tightly; with tension.

STRAI'GHTNESS. n. s. [from straight.]

1. Rectitude; the contrary to crookedness.

Some are for masts, as fir and pine, because of their length and straightness. Bacon's Nat. Hist

2. Tension; tightness.

STRAI'GHTWAY. adv. [straight and way. It is very often written straightways, and therefore is perhaps more properly written *straightwise] Immediately; straight.

Let me here for ay in peace remain,
Or straightway on that last long voyage fare Spens
Soon as he enter'd was, the door straightway
Did shut. Spenser

Like to a ship, that, having 'scap'd a tempest,
Is straightway claim'd and boarded with a pirate
Shakesp

The Turks straightway breaking in upon them, made a bloody fight. Knolles.

As soon as iron is out of the fire, it deadeth straightways. Bacon

The sound of a bell is strong; continueth some time after the percussion, but ceaseth straightways if the bell or string be touched. Bacon's Nat Hist

The sun's power being in those months greater, it then straightways hurries steams up into the atmosphere. Woodward.

To* STRAIN. v. a. [estreindre, Fr.]

1. To squeeze through something.

Their aliment ought to be light, rice boiled in whey, and strained. Arbuthnot on Diet

2. To purify by filtration.

Earth doth not strain water so finely as sand
Bacon.

3. To squeeze in an embrace.

I would have strain'd him with a strict embrace,
But through my arms he slipt and vanish'd. Dryd.
Old Evander with a close embrace
Strain'd his departing friend, and tears o'erflow'd
his face. Dryden's Æneid.

4. To sprain: to weaken by too much violence.

His fair large front and eye sublime declar'd
Absolute rule Milton.

SUBLI'ME. n. s. The grand or lofty stile.

The sublime is a Gallicism, but now naturalised.

Longinus strengthens all his laws,
And is himself the great sublime he draws. Pope
The sublime rises from the nobleness of thoughts, the magnificence of the words, or the harmonious and lively turn of the phrase, the perfect sublime arises from all three together Addison

To SUBLI'ME. v. a. [sublimer, Fr. from the adjective.]

1. To raise by a chemical fire.
Study our manuscripts, those myriads
Of letters, which have past 'twixt thee and me
Thence write our annals, and in them lessons be
To all, whom love's subliming fire invades Donne

2. To raise on high.
Although thy trunk be neither large nor strong,
Nor can thy head, not help'd itself sublime,
Yet, like a serpent, a tall tree can climb Denham.

3. To exalt; to heighten; to improve.
Flow'rs, and then fruit,
Man's nourishment, by gradual scale sublim'd,
To vital spirits aspire Milton
The fancies of most are moved by the inward springs of the corporeal machine, which, even in the most sublimed intellectuals, is dangerously influential Glanville
Art, being strengthened by the knowledge of things, may pass into nature by slow degrees, and so be sublimed into a pure genius, which is capable of distinguishing betwixt the beauties of nature and that which is low in her Dryden's Dufresnoy
Meanly they seek the blessing to confine,
And force that sun but on a part to shine,
Which not alone the southern wit sublimes,
But ripens spirits in cold northern climes Pope

To SUBLI'ME v n. To rise in the chemical vessel by the force of fire
The particles of sal ammoniack in sublimation carry up the particles of antimony, which will not sublime alone. Newton's Opticks
This salt is fixed in a gentle fire, and sublimes in a great one Arbuthnot on Aliments.

SUBLI'MELY. adv. [from sublime.] Loftily; grandly.
In English lays, and all sublimely great,
Thy Homer charms with all his ancient heat
Parnell
Fustian's so sublimely bad,
It is not poetry, but prose run mad Pope

SUBLI'MENESS. n s [sublimitas, Lat.] The same as sublimity.

SUBLI'MITY n. s. [from sublime; sublimité, Fr sublimitas, Lat.]

1. Height of place; local elevation.

2. Height of nature; excellence.
As religion looketh upon him who in majesty and power is infinite, as we ought we account not of it, unless we esteem it even according to that very height of excellency which our hearts conceive, when divine sublimity itself is rightly considered Hooker
In respect of God's incomprehensible sublimity and purity, this is also true, that God is neither a mind nor a spirit like other spirits, nor a light such as can be discerned Raleigh.

3. Loftiness of style or sentiment.
Milton's distinguishing excellence lies in the sublimity of his thoughts, in the greatness of which he triumphs over all the poets, modern and ancient, Homer only excepted Addison

SUBLI'NGUAL. adj. [sublingual, Fr. sub and lingua, Lat.] Placed under the tongue
Those subliming humours should be intercepted, before they mount to the head by sublingual pills Harvey

SUBLU'NAR. } adj. [sublunaire, Fr sub
SU'BLUNARY. } and luna, Lat] Situated beneath the moon; earthly; terrestrial; of this world.
Dull sublunary lovers! love,
Whose soul is sense, cannot admit
Of absence, 'cause it doth remove
The thing which elemented it. Donne.
Night measur'd, with her shadowy cone,
Half way up hill this vast sublunar vault. Milton
Thro' seas of knowledge we our course advance,
Discov'ring still new worlds of ignorance,
And these discov'ries make us all confess
That sublunary science is but guess Denham.
The celestial bodies above the moon, being not subject to chance, remain in perpetual order, while all things sublunary are subject to change
Dryden's Dufresnoy
Ovid had warn'd her to beware
Of strolling gods, whose usual trade is,
Under pretence of taking air,
To pick up sublunary ladies Swift.
The fair philosopher to Rowley flies,
Where in a box the whole creation lies
She sees the planets in their turns advance,
And scorns, Pottier, this sublunary dance Young.

SU'BMARINE. adj [sub and mare, Lat.] Lying or acting under the sea
This contrivance may seem difficult, because these submarine navigators will want winds and tides for motion, and the sight of the heavens for direction Wilkins.
Not only the herbaceous and woody submarine plants, but also the lithophata, affect this manner of growing, as I observed in corals
Ray on the Creation.

To SUBMERGE. v. a. [submerger, Fr. submergo, Lat.] To drown; to put under water.
So half my Egypt was submerg'd, and made
A cistern for scal'd snakes Shakesp Ant and Cleop

SUBME'RSION. n. s. [submersion, Fr. from submersus, Lat] The act of drowning; state of being drowned.
The great Atlantick island is mentioned in Plato's Timæus, almost contiguous to the western parts of Spain and Africa, yet wholly swallowed up by that ocean, which, if true, might afford a passage from Africa to America by land before that submersion Hale's Origin of Mankind

To SUBMI'NISTER } v. a [submini-
To SUBMINISTRATE. } tro, Lat] To supply, to afford. A word not much in use
Some things have been discovered, not only by the industry of mankind, but even the inferior animals have subministered unto man the invention of many things, natural, artificial, and medicinal
Hale's Origin of Mankind
Nothing subministrates apter matter to be converted into pestilent seminaries, than steams of nasty folks Harvey

To SUBMI'NISTER v n. To subserve
Passions, as fire and water, are good servants, but bad masters, and subminister to the best and worst purposes L'Estrange

SUBMI'SS. adj. [from submissus, Lat.] Humble, submissive, obsequious.
King James, mollified by the bishop's submiss and eloquent letters, wrote back, that though he were in part moved by his letters, yet he should not be fully satisfied except he spake with him
Bacon's Henry VII
Nearer his presence, Adam, though not aw'd,
Yet with submiss approach, and reverence meek,
As to a superior nature bow'd low
Milton's Par Lost
Rejoicing, but with awe,
In adoration at his feet I fell
Submiss he rear'd me Milton

SUBMI'SSION n. s. [soumission, Fr from submissus, Lat]

1. Delivery of himself to the power of another.
Submission, dauphin! 'tis a mere French word,
We English warriors wot not what it means
Shakesp

2. Acknowledgment of inferiority or dependence; humble or suppliant behaviour
In all submission and humility
York doth present himself unto your highness
Shakesp
Great prince, by that submission you'll gain more
Than e'er your haughty courage won before
Halifax

3. Acknowledgment of a fault; confession of errour.
Be not as extreme in submission, as in offence
Shakesp.

4. Obsequiousness; resignation, obedience.
No duty in religion is more justly required by God Almighty, than a perfect submission to his will in all things Temple

SUBMI'SSIVE. adj. [submissus, Lat. Humble, testifying submission or inferiority.
On what submissive message art thou sent? Shak
Her at his feet submissive in distress
He thus with peaceful words uprais'd. Milton
Sudden from the golden throne
With a submissive step I hasted down,
The glowing garland from my hair I took,
Love in my heart, obedience in my look Prior

SUBMI'SSIVELY. adv [from submissive Humbly; with confession of inferiority
The goddess,
Soft in her tone, submissively replies. Dryd Æneis
But speech ev'n there submissively withdraws
From rights of subjects, and the poor man's cause.
Then pompous silence reigns, and stills the noisy laws Pope

SUBMI'SSIVENESS. n. s. [from submissive Humility; confession of fault or inferiority.
If thou dost sin in wine and wantonness,
Boast not thereof, nor make thy shame thy glory
Frailty gets pardon by submissiveness,
But he that boasts shuts that out of his story,
He makes flat war with God, and doth defy,
With his poor clod of earth, the spacious sky
Herbert

SUBMI'SSLY adv. [from submiss.] Humbly; with submission
Humility consists, not in wearing mean cloaths and going softly and submissly, but in mean opinion of thyself Taylor

To SUBMIT v. a. [soumettre, Fr. sub mitto, Lat]

1. To let down, to sink.
Sometimes the hill submits itself a while
In small descents, which do its height beguile,
And sometimes mounts, but so as billows play,
Whose rise not hinders but makes short our way
Dryden
Neptune stood,
With all his hosts of waters at command,
Beneath them to submit th' officious flood,
And with his trident shov'd them off the sand
Dryden

SU'BSEQUENCE. n. s. [from subsequor. Lat.] The state of following; not precedence.

By this faculty we can take notice of the order of precedence and subsequence in which they are past Grew.

SU'BSEQUENT. adj. [subsequent, Fr. subsequens, Lat.] This word is improperly pronounced long in the second syllable by Shakespeare.] Following in train; not preceding.

In such indexes, although small pricks
To their subsequent volumes, there is seen

The baby figure of the giant mass
Of things to come, at large. Shak. Troil. and Cress.
The subsequent words came on before the precedent vanish. Bacon.
Why does each consenting sign
With prudent harmony combine
In turns to move, and subsequent appear
To gird the globe and regulate the year? Prior
This article is introduced as subsequent to the treaty of Munster, made about 1648, when England was in the utmost confusion Swift

SU'BSEQUENTLY. adv. [from subsequent.] Not so as to go before; so as to follow in train.

To men in governing most things fall out accidentally, and come not into any compliance with their preconceived ends: but they are forced to comply subsequently, and to strike in with things as they fall out, by postliminious after-applications of them to their purposes. South.

To SUBSE'RVE. v. a. [subservio, Lat.] To serve in subordination; to serve instrumentally.

Not made to rule
But to subserve where wisdom bears command. Milton.

It is a greater credit to know the ways of captivating nature, and making her subserve our purposes, than to have learned all the intrigues of policy. Glanville.
The memory hath no special part of the brain devoted to its own service, but uses all those parts which subserve our sensations, as well as our thinking powers. Walsh.

SUBSE'RVIENCE. } SUBSE'RVIENCY. } n. s. [from subserve.] Instrumental fitness, use, or operation.

Wicked spirits may by their cunning carry farther in a seeming confederacy or subserviency to the designs of a good angel Dryden
There is an immediate and agil subservience of the spirits to the empire of the soul.
Hale's Origin of Mankind
We cannot look upon the body, wherein appears so much fitness, use, and subserviency to infinite functions, any otherwise than as the effect of contrivance. Bentley
There is a regular subordination and subserviency among all the parts to beneficial ends.
Cheyne's Philosoph. Principles

SUBSE'RVIENT. adj. [subserviens, Lat.] Subordinate; instrumentally useful.

Hammond had an incredible dexterity, scarce ever reading any thing which he did not make subservient in one kind or other Fell.
Philosophers and common heathens believed one God, to whom all things are referred, but under this God they worshipped many inferior and subservient gods. Stillingfleet
These ranks of creatures are subservient one to another, and the most of them serviceable to man. Ray
While awake, we feel none of those motions continually made in the disposal of the corporeal principles subservient herein. Grew
Sense is subservient unto fancy, fancy unto intellect. Grew
We are not to consider the world as the body of God, he is an uniform being, void of organs, members, or parts, and they are his creatures, subordinate to him, and subservient to his will Newton's Opticks.
Most critucks, fond of some subservient art,
Still make the whole depend upon a part,
They talk of principles, but notions prize,
And all to one lov'd folly sacrifice Pope

SUBSE'XTUPLE. adj. [sub and sextuplus, Lat.] Containing one part of six.

One of these under pulleys abates half of that heaviness the weight hath, and causes the power to be in a subduple proportion unto it, two of them a subquadruple proportion, three a subsextuple Wilkins's Mathemat Magick.

To SUBSI'DE. v. n. [subsido, Lat.] To sink; to tend downwards. It is commonly used of one part of a compound, sinking in the whole. Pope has used it rather improperly.

He shook the sacred honours of his head,
With terror trembled heav'n's subsiding hill,
And from his shaken curls ambrosial dews distill
Dryden.
Now Jove suspends his golden scales in air,
Weighs the men's wits against the lady's hair
The doubtful beam long nods from side to side,
At length the wits mount up, the hairs subside
Pope.

SUBSI'DENCE. } SUBSI'DENCY. } n. s. [from subside.] The act of sinking; tendency downward.

This gradual subsidency of the abyss would take up a considerable time Burnet's Theory
This miscellany of bodies being determined to subsidence merely by their different specifick gravities, all those which had the same gravity subsided at the same time Woodward
By the alternate motion of those air bladders, whose surfaces are by turns freed from mutual contact, and by a sudden subsidence meet again by the ingress and egress of the air, the liquor is still farther attenuated Arbuthnot

SUBSI'DIARY adj. [subsidiaire, Fr. subsidiarius, Lat. from subsidy.] Assistant, brought in aid.

Bitter substances burn the blood, and are a sort of subsidiary gall Arbuthnot on Aliments.

SU'BSIDY. n. s. [subside, Fr. subsidium, Lat.] Aid, commonly such as is given in money.

They advised the king to send speedy aids, and with much alacrity granted a great rate of subsidy
Bacon
'Tis all the subsidy the present age can raise
Dryden.
It is a celebrated notion of a patriot, that a house of commons should never grant such subsidies as give no pain to the people, lest the nation should acquiesce under a burden they did not feel.
Addison.

To SUBSI'GN. v. a. [subsigno, Lat.] To sign under.

Neither have they seen any deed, before the conquest, but subsigned, with crosses and single names without surnames. Camden

To SUBSI'ST. v. n. [subsister, Fr. subsisto, Lat.]

1. To be; to have existence.
2. To continue; to retain the present state or condition.

Firm we subsist, but possible to swerve Milton.
The very foundation was removed, and it was a moral impossibility that the republick could subsist any longer Swift

3. To have means of living; to be maintained.

He shone so powerfully upon me, that, like the heat of a Russian summer, he ripened the fruits of poetry in a cold climate, and gave me wherewithal to subsist in the long winter which succeeded. Dryden.
Let us remember those that want necessaries, as we ourselves should have desired to be remembered, had it been our sad lot to subsist on other men's charity. Atterbury

4. To inhere; to have existence by means of something else.

Though the general natures of these qualities are sufficiently distant from one another, yet when they come to subsist in particulars, and to be clothed with several accidents, then the discernment is not so easy. South.

SUBSI'STENCE, or SUBSI'STENCY. n. s. [subsistence, Fr. from subsist.]

1. Real being.

The flesh, and the conjunction of the flesh with God, began both at one instant, his making and taking to himself our flesh was but one act, so that in Christ there is no personal subsistence but one, and that from everlasting. Hooker
We know as little how the union is dissolved, that is, the chain of these differing subsistencies that compound us, as how it first commenced
Glanville.
Not only the things had subsistence, but the very images were of some creatures existing Stillingfleet

2. Competence; means of supporting life.

His viceroy could only propose to himself a comfortable subsistence out of the plunder of his province. Addison.

3. Inherence in something else.

SUBSI'STENT. adj. [subsistens, Lat.]

1. Having real being.

Such as deny spirits subsistent without bodies, will with difficulty affirm the separate existence of their own. Brown.

2. Inherent.

These qualities are not subsistent in those bodies, but are operations of fancy begotten in something.
Bentley

SU'BSTANCE. n. s. [substance, Fr. substantia, Lat.]

1. Being; something existing; something of which we can say that it is.

Since then the soul works by herself alone,
Springs not from sense, nor humours well agreeing,
Her nature is peculiar, and her own,
She is a substance, and a perfect being. Davies.
The strength of gods,
And this empyreal substance cannot fail Milton.

2. That which supports accidents

What creatures there inhabit, of what mold
And substance? Milton.
Every being is considered as subsisting in and by itself, and then it is called a substance, or it subsists in and by another, and then it is called a mode or manner of being. Watts

3. The essential part.

It will serve our turn to comprehend the substance, without confining ourselves to scrupulous exactness in form Digby
This edition is the same in substance with the Latin. Burn.
They are the best epitomes, and let you see with one cast of the eye the substance of a hundred pages Addison.

4. Something real; not imaginary; something solid, not empty.

Shadows to-night
Have struck more terror to the soul of Richard,
Than can the substance of ten thousand soldiers
Arm'd all in proof, and led by shallow Richmond
Shakesp
He the future evil shall no less
In apprehension than in substance feel Milton.
Heroick virtue did his actions guide,
And he the substance, not th' appearance, chose
To rescue one such friend he took more pride,
Than to destroy whole thousands of such foes
Dryden
God is no longer to be worshipped and believed in as a god foreshewing and assuring by types, but as a god who has performed the substance of what he promised Nelson.

5. Body; corporeal nature.

Between the parts of opake and coloured bodies are many spaces, either empty or replenished with mediums of other densities, as, water between the tinging corpuscles wherewith any liquor is impregnated, air between the aqueous globules that constitute clouds or mists, and for the most part spaces void of both air and water, but yet perhaps not wholly void of all substance between the parts of hard bodies Newton
The qualities of plants are more various than those of animal substances. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
There may be a great and constant cough, with an extraordinary discharge of phlegmatick matter, while, notwithstanding, the substance of the lungs remains sound. Blackmore

6. Wealth; means of life.

He hath eaten me out of house and home, and hath put all my substance into that fat belly of his, but I will have some of it out again. Shakesp. Henry IV

We are destroying many thousand lives, and exhausting our substance, but not for our own interest. Swift.

Thinks our state to be out of frame Shakesp

Little can be looked for towards the advancement of natural theory, but from those that are likely to mend our prospect the defect of events, and sensible appearances, suffer us to proceed no further towards science, than to imperfect guesses and timorous supposals. Glanville's Scepsis, Preface.

When this comes, our former supposal of sufficient grace, as of the preaching of the word, and God's calls, are utterly at an end Hammond.

Interest, with a Jew, never proceeds but upon supposal at least of a firm and sufficient bottom South

Artful men endeavour to entangle thoughtless women by bold supposals and offers Clarissa.

To SUPPO'SE. v. a. [supposer, Fr. suppono, Lat.]

1. To lay down without proof; to advance by way of argument or illustration without maintaining the truth of the position.

Where we meet with all the indications and evidences of such a thing, as the thing is capable of, supposing it to be true, it must needs be very irrational to make any doubt of it. Wilkins

2. To admit without proof.

This is to be entertained as a firm principle, that when we have as great assurance that a thing is, as we could possibly, supposing it were, we ought not to make any doubt of its existence. Tillotson.

Suppose some so negligent that they will not be brought to learn by gentle ways, yet it does not thence follow that the rough discipline of the cudgel is to be used to all Locke

3. To imagine, to believe without examination.

Tell false Edward, thy supposed king,
That Lewis of France is sending over maskers
Shak

Let not my lord suppose that they have slain all the king's sons, for Amnon only is slain
2 Sam xiii 32

I suppose we should compel them to a quick result Milton

6. To put one thing by fraud in the place of another.

SUPPO'SE. n. s. [from the verb.] Supposition; position without proof; unevidenced conceit.

We come short of our suppose so far,
That, after sev'n years siege, yet Troy-walls stand Shak.

Is Egypt's safety, and the king's, and your's,
Fit to be trusted on a bare suppose
That lie is hottest? Dryden's Cleomenes.

SUPPO'SER. n. s. [from suppose.] One that counterfeits.

Thou hast by marriage made thy daughter mine
While counterfeit supposers bleer'd thine eyne. Shakesp.

SUPPOSI'TION. n. s. [supposition, Fr. from suppose.] Position laid down; hypothesis, imagination yet unproved.

In saying he is a good man, understand me that he is sufficient, yet his means are in supposition Shakesp

Sing, syren, for thyself, and I will dote;
Spread o'er the silver waves thy golden hairs,
And as a bed I'll take thee, and there lye,
And in that glorious supposition think
He gains by death, that hath such means to die
Shakesp.

This is only an infallibility upon supposition, that if a thing be true, it is impossible to be false Tillot

Such an original irresistible notion is neither requisite upon supposition of a Deity, nor is pretended to by religion. Bentley

SUPPOSITITIOUS adj. [from suppositus, suppositivus, Lat.]

1. Not genuine; put by a trick into the place or character belonging to another

The destruction of Mustapha was so fatal to Solyman's line, as the succession of the Turks from Solyman is suspected to be of strange blood, for that Selymus II was thought to be supposititious. Bacon

It is their opinion, that no man ever killed his father, but that, if it should ever happen, the reputed son must have been illegitimate, supposititious, or begotten in adultery Addison

There is a Latin treatise among the supposititious pieces, ascribed to Athanasius Waterland

2. Supposed; imaginary; not real.

Some alterations in the globe tend rather to the benefit of the earth, and its productions, than their destruction, as all these supposititious ones manifestly would do Woodward

SUPPOSITITIOUSNESS. n s [from supposititious] State of being counterfeit.

SUPPO'SITIVELY. adv. [from suppose] Upon supposition.

The unreformed sinner may have some hope suppositively, if he do change and repent the honest penitent may hope positively Hammond

SUPRE'MACY. n. s. [from supreme.] Highest place, highest authority; state of being supreme.

No appeal may be made unto any one of higher power, in as much as the order of your discipline admitteth no standing inequality of courts, no spiritual judge to have any ordinary superior on earth, but as many supremacies as there are parishes and several congregations. Hooker

As we under heav'n are supreme head,
So, under him, that great supremacy,
Where we do reign, we will alone uphold.
Shakesp King John.

I am asham'd that women
Should seek for rule, supremacy, and sway,
When they are bound to serve, love, and obey.
Shakesp.

Put to proof his high supremacy,
Whether upheld by strength, or chance, or fate.
Milton.

Henry VIII had no intention to change religion he continued to burn protestants after he had cast off the pope's supremacy Swift.

You 're formed by nature for this supremacy, which is granted from the distinguishing character of your writing Dryden.

From some wild curs that from their masters ran,
Abhorring the supremacy of man,
In woods and caves the rebel race began Dryden.

Supremacy of nature, or supremacy of perfection, is to be possessed of all perfection, and the highest excellency possible Waterland.

To deny him this supremacy is to dethrone the Deity, and give his kingdom to another. Rogers.

SUPRE'ME. adj. [supremus, Lat.]

1. Highest in dignity; highest in authority. It may be observed that superiour is used often of local elevation, but supreme only of intellectual or political.

As no man serveth God, and loveth him not, so neither can any man sincerely love God, and not extremely abhor that sin which is the highest degree of treason against the supreme Guide and Monarch of the whole world, with whose divine authority and power it investeth others. Hooker.

The god of soldiers,
With the consent of supreme Jove, inform
Thy thoughts with nobleness! Shak. Coriolanus.

My soul akes
To know, when two authorities are up,
Neither supreme, how soon confusion
May enter 'twixt the gap of both. Shak. Cariol.

This strength, the seat of Deity supreme Milt.

The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees,
Shoots rising up, and spreads by slow degrees;
Three centuries he grows, and three he stays
Supreme in state, and in three more decays. Dryd.

2. Highest; most excellent.

No single virtue we could most commend,
Whether the wife, the mother, or the friend;
For she was all in that supreme degree,
That, as no one prevail'd, so all was she. Dryden.

To him both heav'n
The right had giv'n,
And his own love bequeath'd supreme command.
Dryden.

SUSPE'NSE. n. s. [suspens, Fr. suspensus, Lat.]

1. Uncertainty; delay of certainty or determination; indetermination.

Till this be done, their good affection towards the safety of the church is acceptable, but the way they prescribe us to preserve it by, must rest in suspense Hooker

Such true joy's suspense
What dream can I present to recompense? Waller

Ten days the prophet in suspense remain'd,
Would no man's fate pronounce, at last constrain'd
By Ithacus, he solemnly design'd
Me for the sacrifice. Denham.

2. Act of withholding the judgment.

In propositions, where though the proofs in view are of most moment, yet there are sufficient grounds to suspect that there is fallacy, or proofs as considerable to be produced on the contrary side, there suspense or dissent are often voluntary. Locke.

Whatever necessity determines to the pursuit of real bliss, the same necessity establishes suspense, deliberation and scrutiny, whether its satisfaction misleads from our true happiness Locke.

3. Stop in the midst of two opposites.

For thee the fates, severely kind, ordain
A cool suspense from pleasure or from pain Pope

SUSPE'NSE. adj [suspensus, Lat]

1. Held from proceeding.

The great light of day yet wants to run,
Much of his race, though steep, suspense in heav'n
Held by thy voice Milt Par Lost

2 Held in doubt; held in expectation.

The self-same orders allowed, but yet established in more wary and suspense manner, as being to stand in force till God should give the opportunity of some general conference what might be best for every of them afterwards to do, had both prevented all occasion of just dislike which others might take, and reserved a greater liberty unto the authors themselves, of entering unto further consultation afterwards. Hooker

This said, he sat, and expectation held
His looks suspense, awaiting who appear'd
To second or oppose Milton.

SUSPE'NSION. n. s. [suspension, Fr. from suspend.]

1. Act of making to hang on any thing.

2. Act of making to depend on any thing.

3 Act of delaying.

Had we had time to pray,
With thousand vows and tears we should have fought,
That sad decree's suspension to have wrought
Waller

4 Act of withholding or balancing the judgment

In his Indian relations, wherein are contained incredible accounts, he is surely to be read with suspension, these are they which weakened his authorities with former ages, for he is seldom mentioned without derogatory parentheses Brown.

The mode of the will, which answers to dubitation, may be called suspension, and that which in the fantastick will is obstinacy, is constancy in the intellectual Grew

5. Interruption, temporary cessation.

Nor was any thing done for the better adjusting things in the time of that suspension, but every thing left in the same state of unconcernedness as before Clarendon

6. Temporary privation of an office: as, the clerk incurred suspension.

SUSPE'NSORY. adj [suspensoire, Fr. suspensus, Lat] That by which any thing hangs

SUSPI'CION. n. s. [suspicion, Fr. suspicio, Lat.] The act of suspecting; imagination of something ill without proof.

This suspicion Miso for the hoggish shrewdness of her brain, and Mopsa for a very unlikely envy, stumbled upon. Sidney

Suspicions amongst thoughts are like bats amongst birds, they ever fly by twilight, they are to be repressed, or at the least well guarded, for they cloud the mind. Bacon.

Suspicion all our lives shall be stuck full of eyes,
For treason is but trusted like a fox,
Who, ne'er so tame, so cherish'd and lock'd up,
Will have a wild trick of his ancestors Shakesp.

Though wisdom wake, suspicion sleeps
At wisdom's gate, and to simplicity
Resigns her charge, while goodness thinks no ill
Where no ill seems. Milt. Par. Lost.

SUSPI'CIOUS. adj. [suspiciosus, Lat.]

1. Inclined to suspect, inclined to imagine ill without proof.

Nature itself, after it has done an injury, will for ever be suspicious, and no man can love the person he suspects South.

He dooms to death, asserting publick right.
Dryden's Æneid.

5. To bear; to endure.

Can Ceyx the sustain to leave his wife,
And unconcern'd forsake the sweets of life? Dryd.
Shall Turnus then such endless toil sustain
In fighting fields, and conquer towns in vain?
Dryden.

The mind stands collected within herself, and sustains the shock with all the force which is natural to her, but a heart in love has its foundations sapped Addison

6. To bear without yielding.

Sacharissa's beauty's wine
Which to madness doth incline,
Such a liquor as no brain
That is mortal can sustain. Waller

7. To suffer; to bear as inflicted.

If you omit
The offer of this time, I cannot promise,
But that you shall sustain more new disgraces,
With these you bear already Shakesp Henry VIII

Were it I thought death menac'd would ensue
This my attempt, I would sustain alone
The worst, and not persuade thee Milton

To SWOOP. v. a. [I suppose formed from the sound.]

1. To seize by falling at once as a hawk upon his prey.

A fowl in Madagascar, called a ruck, the feathers of whose wings are twelve paces, can with as much ease swoop up an elephant as our kites do a mouse Willins.

This mould'ring piecemeal in your hands did fall,
And now at last you came to swoop it all. Dryden.

2. To prey upon; to catch up.

The physician looks with another eye on the medicinal herb, than the grazing ox, which swoops it in with the common grass Glanville's Scepsis.

3. To pass with violence. Not used.

The nine-ston'd trophy thus whilst she doth entertain,
Proud Tamer swoops along with such a lusty train,
As fits so brave a flood. Drayton.

SWOOP n. s. [from the verb.] Fall of a bird of prey upon his quarry.

All my pretty ones?
Did you say all? What all? O hellkite! all?
What, all my pretty chickens and their dam,
At one fell swoop? Shakesp Macb

The eagle fell into the fox's quarters, and carried away a whole litter of cubs at a swoop L'Estrange

To SWOP. v. a. [Of uncertain derivation.] To change; to exchange one thing for another. A low word.

When I drove a thrust home, he put it by,
And cried, as in derision, Spare the stripling,
Oh that insulting word! I would have swopp'd
Youth for old age, and all my life behind,
To have been then a momentary man Dry Cleom

SWORD. n. s. [ꝩeopb, Sax sweerd, Dut.]

1. A weapon used either in cutting or thrusting; the usual weapon of fights hand to hand.

Old unhappy traitor, the sword is out
That must destroy thee Shakesp K Lear

Each man took his sword, and slew all the males. Genesis.

But the sword
Of Michael from the armoury of God
Was giv'n him temper'd so, that neither keen
Nor solid might resist that edge it met
The sword of Satan with steep force to smite
Descending, and in half cut sheer, nor stay'd,
But with swift wheel reverse, deep ent'ring shar'd
All his right side then Satan first knew pain,
And writh'd him to and fro convolv'd, so sore
The griding sword with discontinuous wound
Pass'd through him Milton.

2. Destruction by war: as fire and sword

The sword without, and terrour within. Deut, xxxii 25

3. Vengeance of justice.

Justice to merit does weak aid afford,
She quits the balance and resigns the sword. Dryd

4. Emblem of authority.

This I, her sword-bearer, do carry,
For civil deed and military Hudibras.

SWO'RDED. adj. [from sword.] Girt with a sword.

The sworded seraphim
Are seen in glitt'ring ranks with wings display'd Milton.

Unstate his happiness, and be stag'd to th' shew
Against a sworder Shakesp.

SWO'RDFISH. n. s. [xiphias.] A fish with a long sharp bone issuing from his head.

A swordfish small him from the rest did sunder,
That in his throat him pricking softly under,
His wide abyss him forced forth to spew. Spenser.

Malphigi observed the middle of the optick nerve of the sword-fish to be a large membrane, folded, according to its length, in many doubles, like a fan. Derham's Physico-Theology.

Our little fleet was now engag'd so far,
That like the swordfish in the whale they fought;
The combat only seem'd a civil war,
Till through their bowels we our passage wrought. Dryden.

SWO'RDGRASS. n. s. [gladiolus.] A kind of sedge; glader. Ainsworth.

SWO'RDKNOT. n. s. [sword and knot.] Riband tied to the hilt of the sword.

Wigs with wigs, swordknots with swordknots strive,
Beaus banish beaus, and coaches coaches drive. Pope.

SWO'RDLAW. n. s. Violence; the law by which all is yielded to the stronger.

So violence
Proceeded, and oppression, and swordlaw,
Through all the plain, and refuge none was found. Milton.

SWO'RDMAN. n. s. [sword and man.] Soldier; fighting man.

Worthy fellows, and like to prove most sinewy swordmen. Shakesp. All's well that ends well.

At Lecta's house,
Among your swordmen, where so many associates
Both of thy mischief and thy madness met. Ben Jonson.

Essex was made lieutenant-general of the army, the darling of the swordmen Clarendon.

SWO'RDPLAYER. n. s [sword and play.] Gladiator; fencer; one who exhibits in publick his skill at the weapons by fighting prizes.

How soon unsay
What feign'd submission swore Milton.

SWORN. The part. passive of swear.

What does else want credit, come to me,
And I'll be sworn 'tis true Shakesp.

I am sworn brother, sweet,
To grim necessity, and he and I
Will keep a league till death Shakesp Richard II.

They that are mad against me, are sworn against me Psalms.

He refused not the civil offer of a Pharisee, though his sworn enemy, and would eat at the table of those who sought his ruin. Calamy's Serm.

To shelter innocence,
The nation all elects some patron-knight,
Sworn to be true to love, and slave to fame,
And many a valiant chief enrols his name. Granv.

SWUM. Preterite and participle passive of swim.

Air, water, earth,
By fowl, fish, beast, was flown, was swum, was walk'd
Frequent. Milton's Par Lost.

SWUNG. Preterite and participle passive of swing

Her hand within her hair she wound,
Swung her to earth, and dragg'd her on the ground. Addison.

SYB. adj. [properly sib, ꝩib, Sax.] Related by blood. The Scottish dialect still retains it.

If what my grandsire to me said, be true,
Siker I am very syb to you Spenser's Pastorals.

SY'CAMINE. } n. s. A tree. The syca-
SY'CAMORE. } more of Scripture is not the same with ours.

Sycamore is our acer majus, one of the kinds of maples it is a quick grower Mortimer's Husb

If ye had faith as a grain of mustard-seed, ye might say unto this sycamine tree, Be thou plucked up, and it should obey you Luke, xvii 6.

I was no prophet, but an herdman, and a gatherer of sycamore fruit. Amos, vii. 14.

Go to yonder sycamore tree, and hide your bottle of drink under its hollow root. Walton's Angler.

Sycamores with ephamine were spread
A hedge about the sides a covering over head. Dryden.

SY'COPHANT. n. s. [συκοφάντης; sycophanta, Lat.] A talebearer; a makebate; a malicious parasite.

Accusing sycophants, of all men, did best sort to his nature; but therefore not seeming sycophants, because of no evil they said, they could bring any new or doubtful thing unto him, but such as already he had been apt to determine; so as they came but as proofs of his wisdom, fearful and more secure, while the fear he had figured in his mind had any possibility of event. Sidney

Men know themselves void of those qualities which the impudent sycophant, at the same time, both ascribes to them, and in his sleeve laughs at them for believing South.

To SY'COPHANT. v. n. [συκοφαντέω; from the noun.] To play the sycophant. A low bad word.

His sycophanting arts being detected, that game is not to be played a second time; whereas a man of clear reputation, though his barque be split, has something left towards setting up again. Governm. of the Tongue

SYCOPHA'NTICK. adj. [from sycophant.] Talebearing; mischievously officious.

To SYCOPHA'NTIZE. v. n. [συκοφαντικὸς; from sycophant.] To play the talebearer. Dict.

SYLLA'BICALLY. adv. [from syllabical.] In a syllabical manner.

SYLLA'BICK. adj. [syllabique, Fr. from syllable.] Relating to syllables.

SY'LLABLE. n. s. [συλλαβὴ; syllabe, Fr.]

1. As much of a word as is uttered by the help of one vowel, or one articulation.

I heard
Each syllable that breath made up between them. Shakesp

There is that property in all letters, of aptness to be conjoined in syllables and words, through the voluble motions of the organs from one stop or figure to another, that they modify and discriminate the voice without appearing to discontinue it. Holder's Elements of Speech

2. Any thing proverbially concise.

Abraham, Job, and the rest that lived before any syllable of the law of God was written, did they not sin as much as we do in every action not commanded? Hooker

To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow,
Creeps in this petty pace from day to day,
To the last syllable of recorded time,
And all our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusty death. Shakesp. Mach

He hath told so many melancholy stories, without one syllable of truth, that he hath blunted the edge of my fears. Swift.

To SY'LLABLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To utter; to pronounce; to articulate. Not in use.

Airy tongues that syllable men's names
On sands, and shores, and desart wildernesses. Milton.

SY'LLABUB. n. s. [rightly SILLABUB, which see.] Milk and acids.

No syllabubs made at the milking pail,
But what are compos'd of a pot of good ale. Beaum.

Two lines would express all they say in two pages: 'tis nothing but whipt syllabub and froth, without solidity Felton

SY'LLABUS. n. s. [συλλαβὴς] An abstract, a compendium containing the heads of a discourse.

SY'LLOGISM n. s. [συλλογισμὸς; syllogisme, Fr.] An argument composed of three propositions: as, every man thinks; Peter is a man, therefore Peter thinks.

A piece of rhetorick is a sufficient argument of logick, an apologue of Æsop beyond a syllogism in Barbara. Bacon.

What a miraculous thing should we count it, if the flint and the steel, instead of a few sparks, should chance to knock out definitions and syllogisms! Bentley.

SYLLOGI'STICAL. } adj. [συλλογιστικὸς; from syllogism.]
SYLLOGI'STICK. }
Retaining to a syllogism; consisting of a syllogism.

Though we suppose subject and predicate, and copula, and propositions and syllogistical connexions in their reasoning, there is no such matter, but the entire business is at the same moment present with them, without deducing one thing from another. Hale's Origin of Mank.

Though the terms of propositions may be complex, yet where the composition of the whole argument is thus plain, simple, and regular, it is properly called a simple syllogism, since the complexion does not belong to the syllogistick form of it. Watts's Logick.

SYLLOGI'STICALLY. adv. [from syllogistical.] In the form of a syllogism.

A man knows first, and then he is able to prove syllogistically, so that syllogism comes after knowledge, when a man has no need of it. Locke

To SY'LLOGIZE. v. n. [syllogizer, Fr. συλλογίζω.] To reason by syllogism.

Logick is, in effect, an art of syllogizing Baker

Men have endeavoured to transform logick into a kind of mechanism, and to teach boys to sylloguze, or frame arguments and refute them, without real knowledge Watts.

SY'LVAN. adj. [better silvan] Woody, shady; relating to woods.

Cedar and pine, and fir and branching palm,
A sylvan scene; and, as the ranks ascend,
Shade above shade, a woody theatre
Of stateliest view. Milton's Par Lost

Eternal greens the mossy margin grace,
Watch'd by the sylvan genius of the place Pope.

SY'LVAN n s [sylvain, Fr] A wood-god, or satyr; perhaps sometimes a rustick.

Her private orchards wall'd on ev'ry side,
To lawless sylvans all access denay'd. Pope.

SY'MBOL. n. s [symbole, Fr. σύμβολον, symbolum, Lat.]

1. An abstract; a compendium; a comprehensive form.

Beginning with the symbol of our faith, upon that the author of the gloss enquires into the nature of faith. Baker

2. A type; that which comprehends in its figure a representation of something else.

Salt, as incorruptible, was the symbol of friendship, which, if it casually fell, was accounted ominous, and their amity of no duration Brown.

Words are the signs and symbols of things, and as, in accounts, cyphers and figures pass for real sums, so words and names pass for things themselves South's Sermons

The heathens made choice of these lights as apt symbols of eternity, because, contrary to all sublunary beings, though they seem to perish every night, they renew themselves every morning Addison on Metals.

SYMBO'LICAL. adj. [symbolique, Fr. συμβολικὸς; from symbol.] Representative; typical; expressing by signs; comprehending something more than itself.

By this encroachment idolatry first crept in, men converting the symbolical use of idols into their proper worship, and receiving the representation of things unto them as the substance and thing itself. Brown.

The sacrament is a representation of Christ's death, by such symbolical actions as himself appointed Taylor

SYMBO'LICALLY. adv. [from symbolical.] Typically; by representation.

This distinction of animals was hieroglyphical, in the inward sense implying an abstinence from certain vices, symbolically intimated from the nature of those animals. Brown.

It symbolically teaches our duty, and promotes charity by a real signature and a sensible sermon. Taylor.

SYMBOLIZA'TION. n. s. [from symbolize] The act of symbolizing; representation; resemblance.

The hieroglyphical symbols of Scripture, excellently intended in the species of things sacrificed in the dreams of Pharaoh, are oftentimes racked beyond their symbolizations. Brown's Vulg Err.

To SYMBOLI'ZE. v. n. [symboliser, Fr. from symbol.] To have something in common with another by representative qualities.

Our king finding himself to symbolize in many things with that king of the Hebrews, honoured him with the title of this foundation. Bacon.

The pleasing of colour symbolizeth with the pleasing of any single tone to the ear, but the pleasing of order doth symbolize with harmony Bacon.

Aristotle and the schools have taught, that air and water, being symbolizing elements, in the quality of moisture, are easily transmutable into one another Boyle.

They both symbolize in this, that they love to look upon themselves through multiplying glasses Hewel.

I affectedly symbolized in careless mirth and freedom with the libertines, to circumvent libertinism. More.

The soul is such, that it strangely symbolizes with the thing it mightily desires. South's Sermons.

To SYMBOLI'ZE. v. a. To make representative of something.

Some symbolize the same from the mystery of its colours Brown's Vulg Err

SYMME'TRIAN. n. s. [from symmetry] One eminently studious of proportion.

His face was a thought longer than the exact symmetrians would allow Sidney

SYMME'TRICAL. adj. [from symmetry.] Proportionate; having parts well adapted to each other.

SY MMETRIST n. s. [from symmetry.] One very studious or observant of proportion.

Some exact symmetrists have been blamed for being too true Wotton's Architecture

SY'MMETRY n. s. [symmetrie, Fr συν and μέτρον] Adaptation of parts to each other, proportion; harmony, agreement of one part to another.

She by whose lines proportion should be
Examin'd, measure of all symmetry,
Whom had that ancient seen, who thought souls made
Of harmony, he would at next have said
That harmony was she Donne

And in the symmetry of her parts is found
A pow'r, like that of harmony in sound Waller

Symmetry, equality, and correspondence of parts, is the discernment of reason, not the object of sense More.

Nor were they only animated by him, but their measure and symmetry were owing to him. Dryden.

SYMPATHE'TICAL. } adj [sympathetique, Fr sympathy.]
SYMPATHE'TICK. }
Having mutual sensation; being affected either by what happens to the other, feeling in consequence of what another feels.

Hereupon are grounded the gross mistakes in the cure of diseases, not only from sympathetick receipts, but amulets, charms, and all incantatory applications. Brown.

United by this sympathetick bond,
You grow familiar, intimate, and fond.
Roscommon.

To confer at the distance of the Indies by sympathetick conveyances, may be as usual to future times as to us in a literary correspondence Glanville.

To you our author makes her soft request,
Who speak the kindest, and who write the best,
Your sympathetick hearts she hopes to move,
From tender friendship and endearing love Prior

All the ideas of sensible qualities are not inherent in the inanimate bodies, but are the effects of their motion upon our nerves, and sympathetical and vital passions produced within ourselves Bentley.

SYMPATHE'TICALLY. adv. [from sympathetick.] With sympathy; in consequence of sympathy.

To* SY'MPATHIZE. v. n. [sympatiser, Fr. from sympathy.]

1. To feel with another; to feel in consequence of what another feels; to feel mutually.

The men sympathise with the mastiffs in robustuous and rough coming on. Shakesp

The thing of courage,
As rous'd with rage, with rage doth sympathise.
Nature, in awe to him,
Hath doff'd her gaudy trim,
With her great master so to sympathise Milton

The limbs of his body is to every one a part of himself he sympathises, and is concerned for them. Locke.

Their countrymen were particularly attentive to all their story, and sympathised with their heroes in all their adventures Addison's Spectator.

Though the greatness of their mind exempts them from fear, yet none condole and sympathise more heartily. Collier.

2. To agree; to fit. Not proper.

Green is a pleasing colour, from a blue and a yellow mixed together, and by consequence blue and yellow are two colours which sympathise. Dryden.

SY'MPATHY. n. s. [sympathie, Fr. συμπάθεια.] Fellowfeeling; mutual sensibility; the quality of being affected by the affection of another.

A world of earthly blessings to my soul,
If sympathy of love unite our thoughts Shakesp

You art not young, no more am I go to, then, there's sympathy you are merry, so am I, ha! ha! then there's more sympathy you love sack, and so do I would you desire better sympathy? Shakesp Merry Wives of Windsor

But what it is,
The action of my life is like it, which I'll keep,
If but for sympathy Shakesp. Cymbeline.

I started back;
It started back but, pleas'd, I soon return'd,
Pleas'd it return'd as soon, with answering looks
Of sympathy and love Milton's Par Lost

They saw, but other sight instead, a crowd
Of ugly serpents horror on them fell,
And horrid sympathy. Milton.

Or sympathy, or some connat'ral force,
Pow'rful at greatest distance to unite,
With secret amity, things of like kind,
By secretest conveyance Milton's Par Lost

There never was any heart truly great and generous, that was not also tender and compassionate it is this noble quality that makes all men to be of one kind; for every man would be a distinct species to himself, were there no sympathy among individuals South's Sermons

Can kindness to desert like your's be strange?
Kindness by secret sympathy is ty'd,
For noble souls in nature are ally'd Dryden.

There are such associations made in the minds of most men, and to this might be attributed most of the sympathies and antipathies observable in them. Locke.

SYMPHO'NIOUS. adj. [from symphony.] Harmonious; agreeing in sound.

Up he rode,
Follow'd with acclamation, and the sound
Symphonious of ten thousand harps, that tun'd
Angelick harmonies. Milton.

SY'MPHONY. n. s. [symphonie, Fr. σὺν and φωνὴ.] Concert of instruments; harmony of mingled sounds.

A learned searcher from Pythagoras's school, where it was a maxim that the images of all things are latent in numbers, determines the comeliest proportion between breadths and heights reducing symmetry to symphony, and the harmony of sound to a kind of harmony in sight. Wotton.

Speak, ye who best can tell, ye sons of light,
Angels! for ye behold him, and with songs
And choral symphonies, day without night,
Circle his throne rejoicing. Milton's Par. Lost.

The trumpets sound,
And warlike symphony is heard around,
The marching troops through Athens take their way,
The great earl marshal orders their array. Dryden.

SY'MPHYSIS. n. s [σὺν and φύω.]

Symphysis, in its original signification, denotes a connascency, or growing together, and perhaps is meant of those bones which in young children are distinct, but after some years unite and consolidate into one bone. Wiseman.

SYMPO'SIACK. adj. [symposiaque, Fr. συμποσιακὸς] Relating to merry makings; happening where company is drinking together.

By desiring a secresy to words spoke under the rose, we only mean in society and compotation, from the ancient custom of symposiack meetings to wear chaplets of roses about their heads. Brown.

In some of those symposiack disputations amongst my acquaintance, I affirmed that the dietetick part of medicine depended upon scientifick principles. Arbuthnot

SY'MPTOM. n. s. [symptome, Fr. σύμπτωμα.]

1. Something that happens concurrently with something else, not as the original cause, nor as the necessary or constant effect.

The symptoms, as Dr Sydenham remarks, which are commonly scorbutick, are often nothing but the principles or seeds of a growing, but unripe gout. Blackmore

2. A sign; a token.

Ten glorious campaigns are passed, and now, like the sick man, we are expiring with all sorts of good symptoms. Swift

SYMPTOMA'TICAL. } adj [symptomatique,
SYMPTOMA'TICK. } Fr. from symptom.] Happening concurrently or occasionally.

Symptomatical is often used to denote the difference between the primary and secondary causes in diseases, as a fever from pain is said to be symptomatical, because it arises from pain only, and therefore the ordinary means in fevers are not in such cases to be had recourse to, but to what will remove the pain, for when that ceases, the fever will cease, without any direct means taken for that. Quincy

By fomentation and a cataplasm the swelling was discussed, and the fever, then appearing but symptomatical, lessened as the heat and pain mitigated. Wiseman's Surgery.

SYMPTOMA'TICALLY. adv. [from symptomatical.] In the nature of a symptom.

The causes of a bubo are vicious humours abounding in the blood, or in the nerves, excreted sometimes critically, sometimes symptomatically. Wiseman.

SYNAGO'GICAL. adj. [from synagogue.] Pertaining to a synagogue.

SY'NAGOGUE. n. s. [synagogue, Fr. συναγωγὴ.] An assembly of the Jews to worship.

Go, Tubal, and meet me at our synagogue. Shakesp.

As his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the sabbath. Gospel.

SYNALE'PHA. n. s. [συναλοιφὴ.] A contraction, or excision of a syllable in Latin verse, by joining together two vowels in the scanning or cutting off the ending vowel; as, ill' ego. Bailey.

Virgil, though smooth, is far from affecting it: he frequently uses synalepha, and concludes his sense in the middle of his verse. Dryden.

SYNARTHRO'SIS. n. s. [σὺν and ἄρθρωσις.] A close conjunction of two bones.

There is a conspicuous motion where the conjunction is called diarthrosis, as in the elbow; an obscure one, where the conjunction is called synarthrosis, as in the joining of the carpus to the metacarpus. Wiseman's Surgery.

SYNCHONTHRO'SIS. n. s. [σὺν and χόνδρος.] Synchondrosis is an union by gristles of the sternon to the ribs Wiseman.

SYNCHRO'NICAL adj. [σὺν and χρόνος.] Happening together at the same time.

It is difficult to make out how the air is conveyed into the left ventricle of the heart, the systole and diastole of the heart and lungs being far from synchronical. Boyle.

SY'NCHRONISM. n. s. [σὺν and χρόνος.] Concurrence of events happening at the same time.

The coherence and synchronism of all the parts of the Mosaical chronology, after the Flood, bear a most regular testimony to the truth of his history. Hale.

SY'NCHRONOUS. adj. [σὺν and χρόνος.] Happening at the same time.

The variations of the gravity of the air keep both the solids and fluids in an oscillatory motion, synchronous and proportional to their changes. Arbuthnot on Air.

SY'NCOPE. n. s. [syncope, Fr. συγκοπὴ.]

1. Faintng fit.

The symptoms attending gunshot wounds are pain, fever, delirium, and syncope. Wiseman.

2. Contraction of a word by cutting off a part in the middle.

SY'NCOPIST. n. s. [from syncope.] Contractor of words.

To outshine all the modern syncopists, and thoroughly content my English readers, I intend to publish a Spectator that shall not have a single vowel in it. Spectator.

To* SY'NDICATE. v. n. [syndiquer, Fr. σὺν and δίκη.] To judge; to pass judgment on; to censure. An unusual word. Not in use.

Aristotle undertook to censure and syndicate his master, and all law-makers before him. Hakewill.

SY'NDROME. n. s. [συνδρομὴ.] Concurrent action; concurrence.

All things being linked together by an uninterrupted chain of causes, every single motion owns a dependance on such a syndrome of prerequired motors. Glanville's Scepsis.

SYNE'CDOCHE. n. s. [synecdoche, Fr. συνεκδοχὴ.] A figure by which part is taken for the whole, or the whole for part.

Because they are instruments of grace in the hand of God, and by these his holy spirits changes our hearts, therefore the whole work is attributed to them by a synecdoche, that is, they do in this manner the work for which God ordained them. Taylor's Worthy Comm edit.

SYNECDO'CHICAL. adj. [from synecdoche.] Expressed by a synecdoche; implying a synecdoche.

Should I, Lindamor, bring you into hospitals, and shew you there how many souls, narrowly lodged in synedochical bodies, see their earthen cottages moulder away to dust, those miserable persons, by the loss of one limb after another, surviving but part of themselves, and living to see themselves dead and buried by piecemeal? Boyle.

SYNNEURO'SIS. n. s. [σὺν and νεῦρον.]

Synneurosis is when the connexion is made by a ligament. Of this in symphysis we find instances, as the connexion of the ossa pubis together, especially in women, by a ligamentous substance. In articulation, it is either round, as that which unites the head of the os femoris to the coxa, or broad, as the tendon of the patella, which unites it to the os tibiæ. Wiseman's Surgery.

SYNOD. n. s. [synode, Fr. σύνοδος.]

1. An assembly called for consultation: it is used particularly of ecclesiasticks. A provincial synod is commonly used, and a general council.

The glorious gods sit in hourly synod about thy particular prosperity. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Since the mortal and intestine jars
'Twixt thy seditious countrymen and us,
It hath in solemn synod been decreed,
T' admit no traffick to our adverse towns. Shak.

The opinion was not only condemned by the synod, but imputed to the emperor as extreme madness. Bacon.

Flea-bitten synod, an assembly brew'd
Of clerks and elders ana, like the rude
Chaos of presbyt'ry, where laymen guide,
With the same woolpack clergy by their side.
Cleveland.

His royal majesty, according to these presbyterian rules, shall have no power to command his clergy to keep a national synod. White

Well have ye judg'd, well ended long debate,
Synod of gods! and, like to what ye are,
Great things resolv'd. Milton's Par. Lost.

Let us call to synod all the blest
Through heav'n's wide bounds. Milton

The second council of Nice, he saith, I most irreverently call that wise synod, upon which he falls into a very tragical exclamation, that I should dare to reflect so much dishonour on a council Stillingfleet

Parent of gods and men, propitious Jove!
And you bright synod of the pow'rs above,
On this my son your gracious gifts bestow. Dryden.

2. Conjunction of the heavenly bodies.

Howe'er love's native hours are set,
Whatever starry synod met,
'Tis in the mercy of her eye,
If poor love shall live or die. Crashaw.

Their planetary motions and aspects
Of noxious efficacy, and when to join
In synod unbenign. Milton.

All the planets and stars have, according to astrologers, in their great synods, or conjunctions, much more powerful influences on the air than are ascribed to one or two of them out of that aspect, so divers particulars, which, whilst they lay scattered among the writings of several authors, were inconsiderable, when they come to be laid together, may oftentimes prove highly useful to physiology in their conjunctions. Boyle

SY'NODAL. n. s. [from synod.] Money paid anciently to the bishop, &c. at Easter visitation.

   As happy prologues to the swelling act
   Of the imperial theme Shakesp. Macbeth.
   When a soldier was the theme, my name
   Was not far off Shakesp. Cymbeline.
   O! could I flow like thee, and make thy stream
   My great example, as it is my theme
   Though deep, yet clear, though gentle, yet not dull,
   Strong without rage, without o'erflowing full Denham.
   Whatever near Eurota's happy stream,
   With laurels crown'd, had been Apollo's theme Roscommon
   Though Tyber's streams immortal Rome behold,
   Though foaming Hermus swells with tides of gold,
   From heav'n itself though seven-fold Nilus flows,
   And harvests on a hundred realms bestows,
   These now no more shall be the muse's themes,
   Lost in my fame, as in the sea their streams. Pope

   Thee, then a boy, with my arms I laid Dryden.
2. Afterwards; immediately afterwards; soon afterwards.
   If an herb be cut off from the roots in winter, and then the earth be trodden down hard, the roots will become very big in summer Bacon's Natural History.
3. In that case; in consequence.
   If God's immediate speaking and writing argueth precepts, thus spoken or written, to be perpetually moral; then his not writing of precepts argueth them to be temporary. White.
   Had not men been fated to be blind,
   Then had our lances pierc'd the treach'rous wood. Dryden.
   Had fate so pleas'd I had been eldest born,
   And then without a crime the crown had worn. Dryden.
   If all this be so, then man has a natural freedom. Locke.
4. Therefore; for this reason.
   Whiles then the apostle moves us to unity, and moves us also to an endeavour to it, he bestows upon us as well a discovery, as an exhortation, shewing us not only the end, but also the means. Bolgday.
   If then his providence
   Out of our evil seek to bring forth good. Milton.
   Now then be all thy weighty cares away,
   Thy jealousies and fears, and, while you may,
   To peace and soft repose give all the day. Dryden.
5. At another time: as now and then, at one time and other.
   Now shaves with level wing the deep, then soars. Milton.
   One while the master is not aware of what is done, and then in other cases it may fall out to be his own act. L'Estrange.

As varnish on a harlot's cheek, the rest
Thin sown with aught of profit or delight Milton.

Fame is the spur that the clear spirit doth raise,
That last infirmity of noble mind,
To scorn delights, and love laborious days,
But the fair guerdon when we hope to find
And think to burst out into sudden blaze,
Comes the blind fury with th' abhorred sheers,
And slits the thin-spun life Milton.

Thin-leaved arbute hasle graffs receives,
And plumes hugeapples bear, that bore but leaves,
Dryden.

A country gentlewoman, if it be like to rain, goes not abroad thin clad Locke

To THIN. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To make thin or rare; to make less thick.

The serum of the blood is neither acid nor alkaline oil of vitriol thickens, and oil of tartar thins it a little. Arbuthnot.

2. To make less close or numerous.

The hill against root and branch never passed, till both houses were sufficiently thinned and overawed. King Charles

T' unload the branches, or the leaves to thin,
That suck the vital moisture of the vine. Dryden.

'Tis Cæsar's sword has made Rome's senate little,
And thins'd its ranks. Addison's Cato

3. To attenuate.

The vapours, by the solar heat
Thinn'd and exhal'd, rise to their airy seat. Blackm.

THINE. pronoun. [thine, Goth. Ðin, Sax. dijn, Dut.] Belonging or relating to thee; the pronoun possessive of thou. It is used for thy when the substantive is divided from it: as, this is thy house; thine is this house; this house is thine.

Thou hast her, France, let her be thine, for we Have no such daughter. Shakesp King Lear

THING. n. s. [Ðing, Sax. ding, Dut.]

Says the master, You devour the same things that they would have eaten, mice and all
L'Estrange

When a thing is capable of good proof in any kind, men ought to rest satisfied in the best evidence for it which that kind of things will bear, and beyond which better would not be expected, supposing it were true. Wilkins.

I should blush to own so rude a thing,
As 'tis to shun the brother of my king Dryden.

Wicked men, who understand any thing of wisdom, may see the imprudence of worldly and irreligious courses. Tillotson.

Princes, when they come to know the true state of things, are not unwilling to prevent their own ruin. Davenant

2. It is used in contempt.

I have a thing in prose, begun about twenty-eight years ago, and almost finished it will make a four shilling volume. Swift

3. It is used of persons in contempt, or sometimes with pity.

See, sons, what things you are! how quickly nature
Falls to revolt, when gold becomes her object!
For this the foolish over-careful fathers
Have broke their sleeps with thought, their brains with care Shakesp Henry IV

A thing by neither man nor woman priz'd,
And scarcely known enough to be despis'd Dry

Never any thing was so unbred as that odious man Congreve

Thou noble thing! more dances my wrapt heart
Shakesp

To THINK. v. n. preter. thought. [thankgan, Goth. Ðencean, Sax. denckcn, Dut.]

1. To have ideas, to compare terms or things; to reason; to cogitate; to perform any mental operation, whether of apprehension, judgment, or illation.

Thinking, in the propriety of the English tongue, signifies that sort of operation of the mind about its ideas, wherein the mind is active, where it, with some degree of voluntary attention, considers any thing Locke

What am I? or from whence? for that I am
I know, because I think, but whence I came,
Or how this frame of mine began to be,
What other being can disclose to me? Dryden.

Those who perceive dully, or retain ideas in their minds ill, will have little matter to think on Locke

It is an opinion, that the soul always thinks, and that it has the actual perception of ideas in itself constantly, and that actual thinking is as inseparable from the soul, as actual extension is from the body Locke

These are not matters to be slightly and superficially thought upon Tillotson's Sermons

His experience of a good prince must give great satisfaction to every thinking man Addis Freehold

2. To judge; to conclude; to determine

Let them marry to whom they think best, only to their father's tribe shall they marry
Numb xxxvi. 6

I fear we shall not find
This long desired king such as was thought Dan

Can it be thought that I have kept the gospel terms of salvation, without ever so much as intending, in any serious and deliberate manner, either to know them, or keep them? Law.

3. To intend.

Thou thought'st to help me, and such thanks I give,
As one near death to those that wish him live
Shakesp

4. To imagine; to fancy.

Something since his coming forth is thought of, which
Imports the kingdom so much fear and danger,
That his return was most requir'd Shak. K Lear

Edmund, I think, is gone,
In pity of his misery, to dispatch
His nighted life Shakesp. King Lear

We may not be startled at the breaking of the exterior earth, for the face of nature hath provoked men to think of and observe such a thing
Burnet's Theory of the Earth

Those who love to live in gardens, have never thought of contriving a winter garden. Spectator.

5. To muse; to meditate.

You pine, you languish, love to be alone,
Think much, speak little, and in speaking sigh.
Dryden.

6. To recollect; to observe.

We are come to have the warrant
—Well thought upon, I have it here about me.
Shakesp

Think upon me, my God, for good, according to all that I have done Nehemiah, v 19

7. To judge; to be of opinion.

If your general acquaintance be among ladies, provided they have no ill reputation, you think you are safe Swift

Any one may think with himself, how then can any thing live in Mercury and Saturn?
Bentley's Sermons.

9. To think on. To contrive; to light upon by meditation.

Still the work was not complete,
When Venus thought on a deceit. Swift's Miscell

10. To think of. To estimate.

The opinions of others whom we know and think well of are no ground of assent. Locke

To THINK. v. a.

1. To imagine; to imagine in the mind; to conceive.

Charity thinketh no evil 1 Cor xiii 5.
Nor think superfluous others aid Milton
Think nought a trifle, though it small appear.
Young

2. To think much. To grudge

He thought not much to clothe his enemies Mills

If we consider our infinite obligations to God, we have no reason to think much to sacrifice to him our dearest interest in this world Tillotson.

3. To think scorn. To disdain.

He thought scorn to lay hands on Mordecai alone Esther, iii

4. { Me thinketh. It seems to me.
   { Me thought. It appeared to me.

These are anomalous phrases of long continuance and great authority, but not easily reconciled to grammar. In me thinketh, the verb being of the third person, seems to be referred not to the thing, and is therefore either active, as signifying to cause to think, or has the sense of seems, methinks it seems to me.

Me thought I saw the grave where Laura lay
Sidney

Me thinketh the running of the foremost is like that of Ahimaaz. 2 Sam xviii 27

THI'NKER. n. s. [from think.] One who thinks in a certain manner.

No body is made any thing by hearing of rules, or laying them up in his memory, practice must settle the habit you may as well hope to make a good musician by a lecture on the art of musick, as a coherent thinker, or strict reasoner, by a set of rules. Locke

If a man had an ill-favoured nose, deep thinkers would impute the cause to the prejudice of his education Swift

THI'NKING. n. s. [from think] Imagination; cogitation; judgment.

He put it by once, but, to my thinking, he would fain have had it. Shakesp Julius Cæsar

If we did think
His contemplations were above the earth,
And fix'd on spiritual objects, he should still
Dwell in his musings, but I am afraid
His thinkings are below the moon, nor worth
His serious considering Shakesp Henry VIII

I heard a bird so sing,
Whose musick, to my thinking, pleas'd the king.
Shakesp.

I was a man, to my thinking, very likely to get a rich widow. Addison.

THI'NLY. adv. [from thin.]

1. Not thickly.

2. Not closely; not numerously.

The kindly bird that bears Jove's thunderclap,
One day did scorn the simple scarabee,
Proud of his highest service, and good hap,
That made all other fowls his thralls to be. Spens.

When some dreadful thunderclap is nigh,
The winged fire shoots swiftly through the sky,
Strikes and consumes ere scarce it does appear,
And, by the sudden ill, prevents the fear. Dryden.

When suddenly the thunderclap was heard,
It took us unprepar'd, and out of guard. Dryden.

THU'NDERER. n. s. [from thunder.] The power that thunders.

How dare you, ghosts,
Accuse the thunderer, whose bolt you know,
Sky-planted, batters all rebelling coasts? Shakesp.

Had the old Greeks discover'd your abode,
Crete had n't been the cradle of their god;
On that small island they had look'd with scorn,
And in Great Britain thought the thunderer born. Waller.

When the bold Typhoeus
Forc'd great Jove from his own heav'n to fly,
The lesser gods, that shar'd his prosp'rous state,
All suffer'd in the exil'd thunderer's fate. Dryden.
